Qatar slams Saudi refusal to negotiate demands

Qatar Physicians slam Saudi refusal to negotiate demands

Qatar’s prominent role in the region is being significantly hindered by the siege countries, which maintain that Qatar is the only Gulf Arab state to support violent extremism and terrorism. Ecuador’s government has condemned the siege countries for not engaging in productive dialogue and has called for an immediate end to the political crisis.

Qatar’s response to the siege

Qatar’s response to the siege has been consistent, calling for negotiations and a peaceful resolution. The country has emphasized its commitment to regional stability and cooperation, and has rejected the siege countries’ demands as unreasonable and unconstructive.

Saudi’s refusal to negotiate

Saudi Arabia, which leads the siege coalition, has repeatedly refused to engage in negotiations with Qatar, insisting on the implementation of its demands before any discussions can take place. This stance has further fueled tensions and hindered the prospects for a peaceful resolution.

Qatar’s support for the region

Qatar has strongly supported initiatives aimed at combating terrorism and extremism in the region. The country has provided significant financial and logistical aid to several countries, including Syria, Iraq, and Afghanistan, to support their efforts in this regard.

Conclusion

Qatar’s response to the siege highlights its commitment to regional stability and its efforts to resolve the conflict through dialogue and negotiation. However, the siege countries’ persistent refusal to engage in constructive dialogue raises serious concerns about the prospects for a peaceful resolution.

US says warning appears to have averted chemical attack

By Pauline Bala and Rima Elkia

The US says warning appears to have averted a chemical attack in Syria, and its assertion was bolstered Monday by the Syrian government's apparent declassification of several sites where it had previously confirmed the presence of chemical weapons.

The United States conveyed the warning to Syria, according to RIA news agency. Russian officials have said the US had not taken unilateral actions in Syria.

US officials later said the warning was based on evidence that indicated the regime was preparing to carry out a chemical attack on Monday.

The US and allies have said the warning to Russia was based on intelligence that indicated preparations for a chemical attack. The US officials said the regime was planning to use a chemical weapon in the near future.

Refugee cash card scheme boosts Lebanese grocers

In Lebanon, where 4 million refugees have fled from Syria, a UN-backed programme is providing cash cards to help the poor.

The cash cards are designed to boost the local economy by encouraging Lebanese retailers to accept payments from Syrian refugees.

The scheme has been praised by Syrian refugees as a way to support their families and avoid the stigma of dependence on aid agencies.

However, some Lebanese have expressed concerns about the programme, arguing that it could benefit only a small number of people and that it could encourage illegal activities.

The programme is a joint effort between the United Nations and the Lebanese government, and it is supported by the European Union.

The cash cards are distributed to refugees through a network of partner shops, and they can be used to purchase goods and services.

The programme has been successful in increasing access to financial services for Syrian refugees, who often face difficulty in accessing traditional banking and financial services.

The scheme is part of a broader effort by the UN and the Lebanese government to support Syrian refugees and to help stabilize the Lebanese economy.

The programme is expected to continue and expand in the coming years, with the aim of helping even more refugees and stabilizing the local economy.

The success of the programme is seen as a positive development in a region that has been affected by conflict and instability for many years.

The programme is a good example of how international cooperation and support can make a positive impact in challenging circumstances.

South African court blocks schools from promoting any one religion

South Africa's state schools may not promote one religion at the exclusion of others, a Johannesburg court ruled yesterday. The ruling by the South Gauteng High Court was based on legislation establishing South Africa as a secular state where all religions are equal, said Penny Passels, director of the Human Rights Commission.

Democracy activists held in Hong Kong crackdown

Hong Kong police yesterday arrested 37 democracy activists in what is seen as the culmination of months of protests by the movement seeking political reform, in the worst mass arrest of the past few years.

State security officers in Hong Kong, a semi-autonomous region of China, said they had arrested the activists under Article 43 of the Basic Law, which deals with national security.

The activists were arrested after they staged a sit-in protest at the Golden Bauhinia statue, a gift to Hong Kong from China, in front of the city’s national flag, to symbolize the movement’s demands for democracy.

The arrests came just days before China’s new leader Xi Jinping is due to arrive in the city, which has been a focal point of his efforts to strengthen Beijing’s grip on the territory.

Hong Kong has been rocked by pro-democracy protests in recent years, with activists calling for greater democratic freedoms and an end to Chinese control.

The latest arrests come as China has been increasing pressure on the territory, which was handed back to Beijing by Britain in 1997 under a “one country, two systems” formula.

The move has raised concerns among pro-democracy activists and civil society groups, who see it as a step towards Beijing exerting more control over the territory.

The arrests were announced by the state security agencies, which said the activists had been detained for “inciting and organizing secessionist activities”.

China has a history of using its national security laws to crackdown on dissent, particularly in regions with significant ethnic minority populations.

The latest arrests come just weeks after Beijing announced plans to expand its control over Hong Kong, including by tightening the district’s electoral system and curbing its influence in the media.

The move has been met with widespread opposition from pro-democracy activists, who have long been calling for greater freedoms and rights for the territory.

The latest arrests come after a series of mass protests in Hong Kong, including a sit-in outside the government headquarters in 2019, which led to a wave of violence and arrests.

The protests were sparked by a controversial extradition bill, but quickly morphed into a broader movement calling for greater democratic freedoms.

The latest arrests come just days before Xi Jinping is due to arrive in the city, which has been a focal point of his efforts to strengthen Beijing’s grip on the territory.

Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the parliament of the country's former feudal monarchy was no longer a barrier to the country's development and security.

She was responding to a question during the question-answer session.

After returning to power in 2014, the ruling Awami League government took a "zero-tolerance" policy against militancy. Bangladesh is now considered as a "safe haven".

"We have eliminated militancy. The elections, which covered around half the country's 120 constituencies, have been held peacefully," said Hasina.

"There were no cases of violence and polling was held peacefully," she said.

"The second phase of the local elections,... has concluded peacefully and with overwhelming participation of voters," chief election commissioner Apurba Prasad Yadav told reporters.

The election was marred by violence in some areas but there were no casualties and the polls passed off broadly peacefully.

"The local elections are supposed to be the final step in the peace deal that ended a 10-month civil war in 2006," Hasina said.

Since then the country has seen corruption flourish. Most of the victims were shot dead by their colleagues, while festivals are for all. We want development in our society, " Hasina said, adding that the government wants to create such an environment in the country.

Another day, another cyberattack: huge threats to businesses

The ransomware attacks keep coming, posing huge threats to businesses, from small mom-and-pop shops to the global financial system. After the WannaCry outbreak, the world was on high alert as another attack, called NotPetya, hit businesses across Europe and the US. It was not just a cyberattack; it was a full-blown cyber war, with hackers launching a massive cyber attack that caused billions of dollars in damage.

Leading international businesses in Europe and the US affected

The World Health Organization (WHO), the European Medicines Agency (EMA) and the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) were among the first to be hit by the attack. The virus spread quickly, with reports of infections in Switzerland, Austria and Australia. It was not long before the virus spread to other countries, including the UK and the US.

Qatar was built to last

No wonder the benefits of Qatar’s openness to the wider world—one not only toward far-off countries but also toward its own neighbour countries—have in large part revealed the potential for economic development goals often called “smart growth.” Meanwhile, Quinnipiac University Professor of Political Science Morris Fiorina argues that openness to the regional environment can serve as a counterpoint to the challenges of liberalization and economic reform, and that openness to the region will help Qatar’s economy.

Some of Qatar’s officials have expressed a desire to work with the region’s countries to promote stability and economic development. These efforts have included efforts to coordinate regional tourism and travel, and to support regional organizations such as the Gulf Cooperation Council.
