Novel grafting tech introduced in Qatar to raise vegetable output

A novel method of vegetable seedling grafting technique has been introduced in Qatar for the first time, the Ministry of Municipality and Environment.

The ministry’s Agricultural Research Department has taken the initiative to produce grafted vegetable seedlings to implement plans to reduce costs and reduce expenses in Qatar’s agricultural sector to achieve food security, according to a State News agency report.

This step comes as part of an agreement to adopt a social development programme funded by Japanese company Mitsui, which is specialized in grafted seedlings.

In this context, research was funded by a loan from the World Bank to ensure the sustainability of production of vegetable crops. Introduction of this technology is one of the ways to transfer technological know-how to Qatar’s local community, with the aim of conducting experiments and producing grafted seedlings at the Agricultural Research Department, to be used in 10 events held in the Qatar Agricultural Environment Conditions, the research department.

Hamad Saket Al-Shammari, director of the Agricultural Research Department, stressed that the fruitful cooperation between the ministry and the Agricultural Research Department is the result of a number of research experiments. This, in turn, led to results and conclusions being presented to farmers and those interested in agriculture in order to support them and the agricultural sector as a whole.

He pointed out that the introduction of grafted seedlings technology is a priority in this programme and is within the framework of the Agricultural Research Department’s main aims, which are to improve the country’s agricultural sector.

To achieve this, the ministry will establish training for employees at the Agricultural Research Department in Al-Umim to produce vegetable seedlings using the automated grafting technique. The use of this technology by the ministry will enable it to support farmers and improve the production of vegetable crops, which will directly reflect on food security.

The Agricultural Research Department has also planned 10 new FIP official tournaments that are all set to be held in Qatar this year, in addition to the 120 scheduled tournaments that are already part of the FIP calendar, opening up new opportunities for players and fans.

Qatar was the spectacular host city of the World Short Championship in November last year, in what was widely praised as a significant step in raising the profile of padel in the regional and international arena.

The Ministry of Labour yesterday launched the IOM Strategy for the Gulf Countries for 2021-2024. The event comes within the framework to emphasise strengthening co-operation with the Gulf countries.

In his speech during the event, the Minister of Labour, Mohamed bin Saleh Al-Shaibani, said Qatar is keen to enhance co-operation with the Gulf organisations, and stakeholders of other countries, or- port co-operation with the Gulf countries.

The IOM, the United Nations’ agency for migration, launched the strategic document in Qatar as part of its mission in Qatar and the keenness of Qatar to support and develop the co-operation and coordination with the Gulf countries for 2021-2024. The event was launched yesterday to contribute to the implementation of the IOM Strategy for the Gulf Countries that was launched yesterday via video conference technology with the United Nations’ Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Al-Shaibani said the launch aims to exploit the capabilities of Qatar to put these com- plexities into practice on the ground, in accordance with the national principles based on respect for human rights and national principles based on human dignity of migrants, and promoting resilience.

He also referred to the inter- est of Qatar to put these com- plexities into practice on the ground, in accordance with the national principles based on respect for human rights and national principles based on human dignity of migrants, and promoting resilience.

Al-Shaibani noted the strat- egy’s contents regarding the national priorities of the Gulf countries and setting into ac- count the demographics of those countries concerning the situation of the expatriate communities.

For its part, Head of Syria hu- manitarian protection and early recovery portfolio of the IOM in the region, Said Al Arji, said, “It is very pleased to continue our important part- nership with Qatar to support Syrian communities vulnerable to conflict and the harsh winter weather. This new agreement will ensure school buildings are ade- quate to deliver quality edu- cation throughout winter which is key in safeguarding children’s right to have an equitable and quality education.”

Al-Shaibani said: “Qatar Fund for Development (QFFD) and the Ministry of Labour collaboratively supported QFFD to the aid of Syrian students in marginalised communities.”

In his speech during the event, Shahwani said, “Qatar Fund for Develop- ment, in partnership with the Ministry of Labour Moham- med bin Saleh Al-Shaibani, offered the governments of the Gulf countries to enhance co-operation with the IOM and sup- port co-operation with the Gulf countries, and stakeholders of other countries, or- port co-operation with the Gulf countries.”

This new agreement will ensure school buildings are ade- quate to deliver quality edu- cation throughout winter which is key in safeguarding children’s right to have an equitable and quality education.”

Funded by Qatar Fund for Development (QFFD) and in collaboration with the Ministry of Labour, the new Education Programme will provide critical educational support to schools and students in marginalised communities in northwest Syria.

The project aims to improve the efficiency and quality in the education process, thereby increasing the number of Syrian students attending during harsh winter months through pre-ventative and massive min- ister to support the project. The project targets to reach over 100,000 beneficiaries by mid-2022 to continue its efforts in the field of education and quality learning opportuni- ties to children in marginalised Syrian communities and their community.

US says Russia preparing pretext to invade Ukraine

Russia

President Vladimir Putin yesterday said his country was preparing to invade Ukraine in a envisaged scenario "that could now unfold."

At the UN Security Council, he said, "We have reason to believe they are stocking up their blood supplies across the front in the Donbas region."

On Friday, the US secretary of state, Antony Blinken, told the US Senate that in the next few days he and his counterparts from 39 other countries would meet in Washington to discuss Russia's "malign activity.

It's a major test for the US and its allies, as well as for America's European allies."

Blinken told the council that "We have reason to believe they are stocking up their blood supplies across the front in the Donbas region."

The most recent and most significant signs of a Russian imminent attack on Ukraine come from Belarus, which has been a staging ground for Russian forces for years. In the last days, Belarusian authorities have increased security at the border with Ukraine, while Russian President Vladimir Putin has met with Belarusian President Alexander Lukashenko. The two leaders discussed the situation in Ukraine and agreed on the need to prepare for a possible military operation against Ukraine. Meanwhile, the Ukrainian government has increased its military readiness and mobilized reserves to counter the potential threat.

The situation in Ukraine has escalated dramatically since the start of the Russian annexation of Crimea in 2014. The ongoing conflict has resulted in the displacement of over 1.5 million people and the death of over 13,000 individuals. The situation has been further complicated by the recent escalation of tensions between Russia and the West, including the negotiation of the New START Treaty, which expired in February 2021.

The Ukrainian government has repeatedly called for a diplomatic solution to the conflict, but Russia has refused to engage in meaningful talks. The Ukrainian government has also been criticized for its lack of preparedness for a potential Russian attack.

The United Nations has called for a diplomatic resolution to the conflict, and the international community has expressed concern over the situation in Ukraine. The US and its allies have imposed sanctions on Russia and have threatened to increase their military presence in the region.

In response, Russia has denied any plans to invade Ukraine and has accused the West of provocations. The Russian government has also called for a diplomatic solution to the conflict, but has refused to engage in meaningful talks with the Ukrainian government.

The situation in Ukraine remains tense, with both sides increasing their military readiness. The international community is closely monitoring the situation and calling for a diplomatic resolution to the conflict.
Bitcoin runs into Russian rules and regulations

In a challenging and uncertain time in Europe, could one offer clear answers to two questions: Can bitcoin be a safe-haven asset? And can Russia be a dominant centre for bitcoin mining?

The answer to the first, for now at least, is no; while fortress gold and safe-haven assets such as stocks tumbling, bitcoin has been gaining ground. It was less than one percent away from hitting the $40,000 mark by the time this report went to press. The second question, for the sake of argument, is a bit more nuanced. But pop off with the Ukraine and Russia aggression, it’s too early to dismiss the argument made by many bitcoin believers that bitcoin futures, which are tradeable assets such as stocks tumbling, could play a role in a scenario where conventional safe-haven assets such as physical gold do not perform as expected.

The 2019 Oscar-winning film Parasite attracted a global audience for its gripping storyline, which chronicles the stark income inequality prevalent in South Korea’s society. A scathing critique by then-President Moon Jae-in, in his State of the Nation address earlier this year, echoed the sentiment, adding that: “We are destroying the beautiful landscape of the Korean peninsula and the entire region, and putting up a nationwide digital wall between us. We are beginning to see something similar to the US-China trade war, and the exodus, which is very painful, is starting to happen, and it is somewhat similar to the situation.”

The poverty rate of 9.4% of income measures of deprivation that the Korean government has been monitoring over the past year has a big impact on bitcoin mining. For those who are below the line, “pop off” is for the sake of argument, it’s too early to dismiss the argument made by many bitcoin believers that bitcoin futures, which are tradeable assets such as stocks tumbling, could play a role in a scenario where conventional safe-haven assets such as physical gold do not perform as expected.

Well-designed Multidimensional Poverty Index studies can bring these important facts of people’s lives to policymakers’ attention, in addition to measuring the overall gap between the richest and poorest. Equipped with this information, policymakers can then develop policies to address inequality. In April 2021, Fatimah Kari, a sociology professor at the University of Malaya, led an MPI survey among the elderly poor at the University of Malaya, and an MPI survey among the bottom 40% of income earners in my constituency of Permatang Pauh in Penang. The goal of the survey was to reflect the impact of the pandemic on impoverished households.

Along with the usual measurements, the survey also included questions about the pandemic’s ominous and how the pandemic’s ominous has affected the elderly poor. The results show that the elderly poor are very vulnerable to the pandemic; relative access to home education for children, and online education for adults, and overall well-being in relation to home confinement during lockdowns. The pilot project aimed to test a “Covid-19” Hopkins to ensure that the government’s relative unpreparedness. It’s a formula for disaster. Its loudest echo is the government’s relative unpreparedness. In April 2021, Fatimah Kari, a sociology professor, was appointed as the government’s new minister to address the pandemic and the floods. It’s a chance to amplify policies in the wake of the flooding, but it’s also a chance to improve living standards in vulnerable groups. Obesity: the root of evil and sins

It is not that the obese are devil-like. It is not a sign of weakness, laziness, or lack of effort that leads to obesity. Obesity is the root of evil and sins as it causes various health problems and can lead to a shorter lifespan.

Motives behind this behavior

- Laziness and lack of effort: Many obese individualsdo not engage in physical activity or make an effort to change their lifestyle.
- Lack of knowledge: Some obese individuals may not be aware of the health risks associated with obesity or may not know how to make lifestyle changes.
- Socioeconomic factors: Obese individuals may have limited access to healthy foods or may face other barriers to adopting a healthy lifestyle.

The hardest form of patience

- Exhaustion: Enduring physical or emotional exhaustion can be very challenging.
- Illness: Chronic illness or disability can make it difficult to maintain patience.
- Lack of support: Feeling isolated or unsupported can make it hard to maintain patience.
- Financial stress: Financial problems can put extra stress on individuals and make it hard to maintain patience.

Importance of seeking forgiveness

- Forgiveness is a powerful tool for healing: Seeking forgiveness can help individuals forgive themselves and others, which can improve mental and emotional well-being.
- Forgiveness promotes empathy and understanding: Forging谅解 can help individuals see situations from others' perspectives, which can lead to increased empathy and understanding.
- Forgiveness promotes positive relationships: Forgiving others can help individuals maintain positive relationships, which can improve overall well-being.

The poorest form of patience

- Perseverance: Enduring in the face of difficult situations.
- Persistence: Continuously working towards a goal even when faced with obstacles.
- Endurance: Enduring physical or mental pain or discomfort.

The 2022 Qatar Batabit Show – a premier event for the region’s biker community – got under way at Katara yesterday. Bike enthusiasts from around the Middle East are participating in the two-day event, which features contemporary motorcycles, classics, cruisers, modified bikes, and more.

A bike parade was held yesterday as part of the event, with more than 20 bikes and members of the public taking part at the venue – opposite The St Regis Doha – to take marvel at the variety of two-wheelers on display.

The show is open from 3pm-10pm.

According to the QM, this exhibition “presents a portrait of American culture, as seen through the artist’s lens while he was growing up in suburban Pennsylvania ... each piece showing his memories, influences and fascination with American visual culture.”

“Consisted of an exquisite self-portrait, Loie by America to include sculptures and paintings reflecting the artist’s fascination with the female form that reflect the viewer and call attention to issues of self-transformation and becoming,” the QM said.

There are other Qatar Museum exhibitions, including Radii: Art & Disorder (on view until March 17 at Mathaf Arab Museum of Modern Art, Qatar) and The 50th Annual Principals’ Gala Dinner – Qatar Museum (QM Gallery Al Raya). The exhibition, titled Chrisi- on show at QM Gallery Al Raya.
