Arab, Islamic FMs slam Israeli steps in the West Bank

The Foreign Ministers of Qatar, Jordan, the UAE, Indonesia, Pakistan, Turkiye, Saudi Arabia, and Egypt condemned in the strongest terms the illegal Israeli decisions and measures aimed at imposing unlawful Israeli sovereignty, entrenching settlement activity, and enforcing a new legal and administrative reality in the occupied West Bank, thereby accelerating attempts at its illegal annexation and the displacement of the Palestinian people. They reaffirmed that Israel has no sovereignty over the occupied Palestinian territory.

The foreign ministers expressed absolute rejection of these actions, warning that continued expansionist Israeli policies and illegal measures in the West Bank fuel instability and conflict. They underscored that such steps violate international law, undermine the two-state solution, and threaten the Palestinian people's right to establish an independent state on the 4 June 1967 lines, with occupied Jerusalem as its capital.

Citing UN Security Council Resolution 2334 and the 2024 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, they reaffirmed these measures are null and void, urging the international community to compel Israel to halt its escalation and respect international legitimacy. \(QNA\)

Theme for a dream: How Plantaform won over Qatar

Doha

When Alberto Aguilar stepped off the PITCH stage at Web Summit Qatar 2026 as the competition's winner, he wasn't just holding a trophy. He cradled proof that a space-age idea – one Nasa once toyed with for orbiting stations – could now take root in desert kitchens.

Plantaform, the Ottawa-based agtech venture Aguilar co-founded, had just swayed judges at an event that drew 30,000-plus attendees, more than 1,600 startups, and nearly a thousand investors from 127 countries. The win came Fogponics is more than a tech buzzword. It's physics in service of sustainability.

Web Summit winner eyes Qatar partnerships as fogponics technology promises year-round fresh produce with 95% less water with more than bragging rights: an open door to capital, visibility, and credibility. Since last year's edition of Web Summit Qatar, participating startups have collectively raised $205 million – a figure founders now eye as a measure of post-Summit acceleration.

But Plantaform's pitch wasn't wrapped in market metrics or glossy buzzwords. It was wrapped in mist – literally.

The company's smart indoor gardens use fogponics, a soil-free system that bathes plant roots in a fine ultrasonic fog of water and nutrients. The result: year-round harvests of herbs and greens with 50% less water than hydroponics – and a staggering 95% less than soil-based systems. For a region defined by arid conditions and import dependence, the appeal was instant and visceral. To Page 5

The event is held as part of Qatar's vision to foster civilisational dialogue and broaden the horizons of cultural exchange with various countries of the world, as well as consolidate culture as a shared space for human convergence. The opening ceremony showcased a series of Tajik heritage performances on the main stage of the Ministry of Culture.

Running from Feb 8-11, the event provides an extraordinary experience on the platforms of Tajik culture and arts. Today a cultural event has been inaugurated to build a spiritual bridge, as long as culture is the sole language that cannot be translated, because it emanates from hearts to hearts, a culture that brings people closer, Sattoriyev said.

Sattoriyev added that the two nations have been forging enduring pillars that underpin international dialogue for centuries, emphasising that Qatar and Tajikistan are not merely neighbours but co-authors and participants in international civilisation, whose territories have been transformed into hubs for the exchange of knowledge, arts, and judiciousness over centuries.

She elaborated that the cultures of both nations are closely interlocked and noted that Qatar has genuinely become an intellectual and cultural oasis on planet Earth.

Culture has become one of the utmost forms of diplomacy, as the relationship between the two countries today is elevated to new heights, with Tajikistan considering Qatar as its closest and most reliable partner. The current cultural days are the joint statement for peace and reconciliation, Sattoriyev underlined.

Ministry hosts workshop on using AI to support Arab culture

The Ministry of Culture yesterday held a special two-day workshop on using AI to serve Arab culture, in collaboration with the Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organisation (Alesco) and the Qatar National Commission for Education, Culture and Science.

The workshop provides an interactive platform to enhance cultural professionals' understanding of advanced AI applications, equipping participants with the skills needed to use these technologies and enabling them to transform creative ideas into practical solutions that help preserve Arab cultural identity.

Director of the ministry's Department of Culture and Arts, Abdulrahman al-Dulaimi, said the initiative reflects the rapid global transformations and the need to invest in knowledge and skills to keep pace with technological advances.

He stressed that AI is a key driver for developing cultural content and expanding access to culture in innovative ways. Meanwhile, Director of IT at Alesco, Dr Mohamed Jemni, described AI as more than a technological tool, calling it a strategic lever that reshapes production methods and safeguards human memory.

He noted that this transformation presents unprecedented opportunities for Arab culture, alongside challenges that require effective governance and investment in knowledge.

The workshop explored AI's potential to digitise and protect Arab cultural heritage, enhance production and distribution of digital cultural content, support the Arabic language and endangered dialects, and develop creative and cultural industries through innovative methods.

Moza al-Hammadi, an expert on organisational affairs with the Qatar National Commission for Education, Culture and Science, highlighted that AI-driven transformations are affecting not only economic and industrial sectors but also culture, arts, and content creation. She stressed that these shifts are changing the ways societies preserve their memory and identity for future generations.

Al-Hammadi cited international data showing that over 60% of global digital content is produced in just five languages, while Arabic accounts for only 3% of online content despite being spoken by more than 450mn people worldwide. She noted that this gap presents a significant opportunity to strengthen Arab digital presence using modern technologies, particularly AI. She added that more than 70% of leading cultural institutions worldwide have begun integrating AI applications into their archiving and content production plans.

The workshop is designed to respond to these trends and directly empower professionals in libraries, museums, heritage centres, as well as researchers, entrepreneurs, and software developers. (QNA)

Ashghal in pact with AKCC to recycle sludge from treatment plants

The Public Works Authority 'Ashghal' signed a memorandum of understanding (MoU) for a strategic partnership with Al Khalij Cement Company (AKCC), aimed at recycling 100% of the sludge generated by Ashghal's wastewater treatment plants across Qatar.

The signing ceremony was witnessed by HE the Minister of Municipality Abdullah bin Hamad bin Abdullah al-Attiyah; Chairman of the Board of Qatari Investors Group, Abdullah bin Nasser al-Misnad; and President of the Public Works Authority 'Ashghal', Engineer Mohammed bin Abdulaziz al-Meer along with a select group of representatives from various concerned entities.

This initiative represents a significant step towards implementing the principles of the circular economy in Qatar, where massive quantities of sludge, ranging between 744,000 and 1.29mn tonnes, will be converted into clean energy over a period of five years. Previously considered waste, the sludge will now become a value-added resource through sustainable treatment and full recycling. The agreement also contributes to solving sludge disposal challenges by avoiding its transportation and/or landfilling, thus reducing carbon emissions.

On the importance of the agreement, Engineer Mohammed bin Abdulaziz al-Meer stated: "This partnership with Al Khalij Cement Company reflects Ashghal's commitment to achieving environmental sustainability and the circular economy, through the integrated recycling of wastewater, by using treated water for irrigation and cooling and utilising solid byproducts as fuel catalysts and inputs in cement products." On his part, Abdullah bin Nasser al-Misnad said: "This partnership embodies our ambitious vision to drive sustainable growth, as we focus on integrating alternative fuels and renewable materials into our operations to reduce emissions, particularly carbon emissions, while simultaneously protecting natural resources. Through enhancing our competitiveness, we aim to achieve full alignment with Qatar National Vision 2030."

This agreement comes as part of Ashghal's efforts to develop sustainable waste management solutions, where the authority recycles 98% of treated wastewater and uses it in agriculture, afforestation and strategic storage, in support of environmental sustainability in Qatar. (QNA)

Ministry carries out cleanup of desert sites, wild meadows

The Ministry of Environment and Climate Change (MoECC)'s Department of Land Protection has carried out a comprehensive field cleanup campaign across various regions of the country, covering a number of wild meadows and desert sites, as part of its ongoing efforts to protect the natural environment and preserve vegetation cover.

The campaign resulted in the removal of charcoal, wood, and firewood waste left behind by desert visitors during their camping trips.

The specialised teams worked to restore the sites to their natural condition, contributing to the revival of the meadows and desert areas and supporting the growth of wild plants, which provide a natural habitat for biodiversity, including wildlife and birds.

The MoECC stressed the importance of environmental conservation and sustainability through the adoption of responsible practices such as refraining from lighting fires directly on the soil, as leaving fire residues constitutes a clear violation of the environmental legislation in force, due to the environmental damage and potential risks it poses to the natural ecosystems.

The Ministry of Environment and Climate Change (MoECC) is participating in the National Sport Day (NSD) 2026 today through a wide range of sports activities for the ministry's employees and their families at Khalifa International Tennis and Squash Complex, in co-operation with the Qatar Tennis, Squash, and Badminton Federation.

The event is set to include a variety of sports activities, such as padel and tennis, in addition to walking and fitness exercises.

This will allow employees of different age groups and their children to take part in an interactive sporting atmosphere that enhances teamwork and communication among participants and encourages the adoption of physical activity as part of a daily lifestyle.

Dr Farhoud Hadi al-Hajri, the director of the MoECC's Public Relations and Communication Department, stressed that the ministry's participation in the NSD is part of its efforts to support national initiatives that seek to raise awareness of the importance of sports and to reinforce health concepts in the work environment.

He also pointed out that the NSD has contributed to reinforcing healthy values and concepts within the community and has played a role in raising awareness of the importance of practicing physical activity on a regular basis.

Media City Qatar attracted interest from 244 companies during Web Summit Qatar 2026

During the recently held Web Summit Qatar 2026, 244 interested leads expressed interest in joining Media City Qatar over the four-day event, reflecting strong regional and international interest in establishing media and creative businesses in Qatar.

Applications submitted during the event benefited from exclusive incentives available only to Web Summit participants, including application fee waivers and initial and annual licensing fee waivers for the first three years.

These incentives are enabled by Media City Qatar's collaboration with the Qatar Financial Centre (QFC), formalised through a memorandum of understanding signed in January 2024.

Through this collaboration, media companies pre-approved by Media City Qatar are registered with the QFC, enabling them to operate in accordance with the relevant regulations while benefiting from summit-specific advantages.

"For another year, the level of interest we saw at Web Summit Qatar highlights Media City Qatar's role as a destination for media and creative companies looking to establish and scale," said Media City Qatar chief executive Hamad Omar Al-Mannai.

"This sustained momentum reflects confidence in our ecosystem and in Qatar as a place where ideas, talent, and businesses can grow," he said. "As these companies move through onboarding, they will contribute new capabilities, expertise, and economic value that strengthen our media sector and support Qatar's broader diversification ambitions under Qatar National Vision 2030."

Throughout the summit, Media City Qatar maintained an active presence, sponsoring the Media Village for the third consecutive year and engaging directly with founders and companies through its booth at the Startup Qatar Pavilion, hosted by Invest Qatar.

From gaming and animation to content creation and production, Media City Qatar continues to attract companies contributing to a dynamic and evolving media ecosystem.

QFFD, QRCS deploy medical aid convoy to Sudan

A humanitarian aid convoy from Qatar, comprising seven trucks loaded with emergency and life-saving medications, has been deployed to support the health sector in Sudan, amidst the current humanitarian crisis there, in an initiative co-launched by the Qatar Fund for Development (QFFD) and the Qatar Red Crescent Society (QRCS).

It is the first of a series of trucked aid convoys to be deployed by Qatar with vital and emergency medications for Sudan.

This shipment will be followed by successive ones, totalling 70 containers, or 1,400 pallets, of medical aid from Qatar, for the benefit of around 500,000 patients in 12 states in Sudan, at a total cost of more than QR13.3mn.

"This co-operation is inspired by Qatar's unwavering humanitarian commitment to supporting the people of Sudan, especially as the health sector there is facing unprecedented challenges due to the war and escalating humanitarian crisis," acting QFFD deputy director-

Fatima bint Jaber al-Ahbabi said in a statement.

"The QFFD is committed to ensuring the continued delivery of life-saving medical aid in an effective and systematic manner," she added.

Assistant QRCS secretary-general (Relief and International Development) Mohamed Bader al-Sada expressed his sincere thanks and appreciation to the QFFD for that noble initiative, which is part of Qatar's nonstop contributions to the humanitarian efforts aimed at alleviating suffering in Sudan.

"The QRCS is fully prepared to implement this mega project, via its representation office in Sudan, capitalising on its field expertise and logistical resources," he said. "To that end, we will work closely together with the competent authorities in Sudan to ensure the delivery of medications from Qatar to Sudan."

"The medications will be transported through designated collection points to the target medical supply centres and health facilities, while paying attention to equitable and immediate distribution to avoid disruption of healthcare services, given the current security and humanitarian challenges," he added. - QNA

SJC, QU celebrate first cohort graduation of Family Mediation diploma

The Supreme Judicial Council (SJC), in collaboration with Qatar University (QU), has celebrated the graduation of the first cohort of the Family Mediation diploma.

This is a demonstration of the advancement of restorative justice in Qatar, and enhances the corporate path intended to consolidate amicable solutions for familial disputes, culminating in the launch of the occupational diploma in November 2025, during which 20 family mediators finalised extensive training supervised by the QU's Community Service and Continuing Education Centre.

The programme covered integrated scientific and applied content that primarily focused on imbuing participants with advanced skills in administering and settling family disputes based on the best occupational practices.

The programme represents a strategic step to build a qualified national workforce in this kind of mediation, capable of handling family disputes through modern and effective techniques, aligning with the SJC's orientations toward prioritising restorative justice as a primary option prior to litigation.

In previous remarks to the local press, Family Court administrative director Khamis al-Muraikhi said that the programme is a significant pillar to enhance the court's work quality, as well as the workforce responsible with the enforcement of conciliation strategies.

This, he said, helps reduce social and psychological impacts of family disputes, particularly on children.

This diploma is academically approved, al-Muraikhi outlined, and includes 60 hours of training, which is periodically laid out at each academic class to qualify new cohorts of family mediators. - QNA

US Chamber bullish on Qatar business growth

He also hailed Qatar's ability to leverage sports infrastructure for broader economic growth.

"Following the 2022 FIFA World Cup, visitor numbers surged from 2.7mn in 2022 to 6mn in 2025," Choksy stressed. "They've really leveraged upon the World Cup and the presence and the infrastructure to grow."

Beyond energy and technology, he emphasised that critical minerals are becoming a new area of co-operation, citing Qatar as the eighth Pax Silica signatory.

Choksy also said that the US Chamber is strengthening institutional linkages in Doha, citing the US-Qatar Business Council Doha (USQBC Doha) as its formal partner.

"Additionally, we are really looking at third-country co-operation with the US, Qatar, and Syria, and we hope to organise a dedicated session on this during the upcoming Qatar Economic Forum," he told Gulf Times.

Choksy noted that partnerships are already emerging, adding: "We think that there's a perfect match between American companies, large Qatari private sector enterprises, and Syrian businesses."

"In a year, we see Plantaform's smart indoor gardens becoming a common household appliance across the GCC, whilst also scaling our fogponics technology into commercial greenhouses designed to grow food efficiently in desert environments," Aguilar said after the win.

Winning in Qatar has had ripple effects: "We met many investors throughout Web Summit, but winning PITCH definitely brought the most attention," Aguilar said. "It's still early, but the quality of conversations has been very strong, particularly with strategic and regional investors."

What took him in wasn't the volume of funding interest – it was its acuity.

"What surprised me most was how informed and proactive local investors are when it comes to agtech and sustainability. There's a clear understanding that food security is not a future issue; it's a current one."

That insight prompted a decisive move.

"Middle East expansion is absolutely a priority for us, particularly in the GCC, where the need and the willingness to deploy solutions are aligned," Aguilar revealed. "We've been studying the market for many years, and finally took the leap to relocate to Riyadh in Q4 2025 to focus on serving the whole region."

The relocation is part of a two-pronged strategy: retail partnerships to make fogponic gardens as common as microwaves, and state collaborations to scale greenhouse systems across the Gulf's harshest terrains.

"It allows us to address food security from both ends of the system: from large-scale local production all the way to the household," Aguilar said.

When mist becomes infrastructure

Fogponics is more than a tech buzzword. It's physics in service of sustainability.

"The key difference is fogponics itself – it allows plants to absorb nutrients more efficiently whilst using 50% less water than hydroponics or 95% compared to soil-based systems," Aguilar said.

"From a user perspective, the system is fully automated, compact, and clean, designed for people with no gardening experience," he continued. "From an agricultural standpoint, it delivers faster growth, healthier roots, and consistent yields, which is why the same technology scales from homes to commercial greenhouses."

That pragmatism shaped Plantaform's Middle East playbook.

After dazzling at the CES 2025 trade show with Nasa-style futurism, Aguilar's team recalibrated for Doha, emphasising water efficiency, local production, and resilience.

"Here, we focused less on novelty and more on relevance," he explained. "Instead of positioning fogponics as a futuristic technology, we framed it as a practical solution to water scarcity and food imports."

From Ottawa to Riyadh – with Doha on the map

That scalability may be its most radical feature.

In a Gulf climate where summer heat hovers above 45°Celsius, the ability to grow indoors, sustainably, and with negligible water waste could rewrite how households – and cities – feed themselves.

The PITCH trophy might just be the beginning; whether Plantaform can convert acclaim into investment remains to be seen, but its relocation and regional partnerships hint at a long game built on grounded ambition.

"Conversations with investors and operators have been very hands-on and focused on real deployment and impact, which has been incredibly energising," Aguilar said.

In a region where talk often outpaces action, this focus on doing – not just promising – may well be Plantaform's sharpest edge.

its relocation and regional partnerships hint at a long game built on grounded ambition.

The day is also viewed as an opportunity to bring communities closer together through sport, based on the sporting principles of team building, inclusion and unity, participation, fitness and health.

Along with the extensive sporting events across the country, National Sport Day also focuses on Qatari culture acting as a reminder of Qatar's ancient sporting heritage and the role it has played in the country's most recent developments.

From Gaza to Doha, a journey of healing through volunteering

Many years ago, young university student Azza Abu Shar approached the Red Crescent team in Gaza.

With hesitation in her voice, she asked them a simple yet profound question: "How can I help you?"

In that moment, Abu Shar was taking her first step towards volunteering – a path that she has been on through years of illness, war and alienation.

Abu Shar, a volunteer in many initiatives with Qatar Foundation (QF), said: "I began my journey as a volunteer at a very young age. I worked during wars, accompanied ambulances, and learned what commitment truly means in the most difficult times."

"Volunteering gave me strength and completely changed how I see life, work, and community service," she added.

In Gaza, Abu Shar became a fitness trainer and later a sport teacher, and even after earning her master's degree, volunteering remained a constant in her life, eventually becoming a core part of her identity.

Alongside her volunteering work, Abu Shar faced a major health challenge.

"I was diagnosed with a pituitary gland tumour and had surgery in Jerusalem before the war," she recalled. "The tumour returned, and when the war started, border restrictions made treatment nearly impossible. My condition worsened, forcing me to resume treatment with higher doses."

Despite her illness, Abu Shar spoke with faith and sees it as a hidden blessing, it allowed her to visit Jerusalem, pray at Al-Aqsa Mosque, and have deep spiritual experiences.

When the Gaza war began in October 2023, she arrived in Qatar to receive medical treatment, and she immediately found ways to give back by helping wounded individuals and families evacuated to Qatar from Gaza, who the QF has been involved in supporting.

When the Gaza war began in October 2023, she arrived in Qatar of sports to disability support – all of which profoundly reshaped her worldview.

At the QF's Ability Friendly Programme – designed to empower persons with disabilities through sports and community engagement – she had a transformative experience where volunteers, like her, participated in activities that simulated the challenges faced by persons with disabilities.

"We used wheelchairs, covered our eyes, and relied only on hearing," Abu Shar explained. "That's when I truly understood how difficult it is, and that we can never fully grasp another person's struggle unless we put ourselves in their place."

She later applied for a position as a physical education teacher at a school in Qatar and was accepted.

Abu Shar sees this as one of the natural outcomes of her volunteering journey.

"Volunteering strengthened my relationships," she said. "In a new country and a different culture, it turns you into an active member of society rather than a spectator."

Yet Abu Shar's memory remains heavy with scenes from the war in Gaza – families wiped out; children pulled from beneath the rubble.

"In those moments I realised that people standing with each other is not a choice, it's a necessity for survival," she said. "Volunteering became my way of resisting collapse."

Today, Abu Shar dreams of earning a PhD to widen her impact.

As a teacher, she aims to educate with compassion.

And most importantly, volunteering is central to her life, it's not just what she does, but who she is.

NSD highlights Qatar's commitment to community well-being

The National Sport Day, observed annually on the second Tuesday of February, is one of the most important events in Qatar. It is highly valued for its emphasis on health and safety, reflecting the state's commitment to community well-being and empowering individuals to lead healthy lives, thus instilling positive values that benefit the human mind.

Over the years, the concept of National Sport Day has become firmly established, and practicing sports has become a year-round activity for community members, not just a single day. However, the event is particularly vibrant on National Sport Day, underscoring the profound value of sports and its deeper meanings.

The National Sport Day contributes to raising awareness of sports and health within the community, thereby enhancing individuals' ability to achieve success and excel in all aspects of their lives.

Qatar has established a global presence when it comes to sporting events, whether through participation, hosting, or organising them. This has become synonymous with success in event management. However, the concept and organisation of National Sport Day have elevated the value of practicing sports, encouraging a strong commitment and dedication among members of society. This underscores that sports is a way of life, not merely a hobby enjoyed by many.

All segments of society is keen to participate in the National Sport Day activities, each according to their physical abilities and athletic skills. All the necessary elements and tools for successful and proper exercise are available, promoting physical benefits and preventing injuries. This is facilitated by specialised teams in physical education and the technical aspects of each sport, encouraging everyone in the community to commit to sports.

Official bodies in the country are committed to providing all available resources and sports equipment to enable members of society to take advantage of National Sport Day. They also encourage participation in sports activities and utilise the facilities to gain comprehensive educational experience and keep abreast of advancements in sports science, whether for regular or intermittent exercise.

Sport Day provides community members with ample opportunity to benefit from activities designed for children and women, utilising the best methods and approaches, under the guidance of specialised sport trainers. This allows families to participate in sports in a way that is optimal and considers the physical abilities and energy levels of each family member.

Many organisations also emphasise that sports participation should align with the various interests and sports of individuals, according to their abilities and age, focusing on what benefits the body, enhances capabilities, and prevents injuries resulting from improper exercise. This is achieved through ongoing awareness and guidance before and during sport activities.

The sporting events encompass all types of sports, ensuring every participant has ample opportunity to access sports equipment, training, and health services, including awareness campaigns and technical guidance. State sports authorities provide coaches and specialists in all sports, while community organisations organise fitness events, strength training, and power lifting sessions, offering free consultations on fitness and health.

Clubs consistently open their doors to the public, making all their resources available to assist community members in practicing sports and encouraging citizens and residents to try new ones.

They also raise awareness of the value of Sport and their benefits for physical and mental health, helping participants adopt healthier lifestyles and protect themselves from diseases caused by a lack of exercise.

The National Sport Day presents a valuable opportunity for many members of the community to organise their lives and reconsider their daily routines, incorporating sports with its proven value in promoting a healthy and fit lifestyle, thus contributing to enhanced performance.

In addition to state-organised sporting activities, the value of sports lies in encouraging all segments of society to build a strong connection between work and sports, and between study and sports, in order to contribute to a healthy lifestyle and a system based on health and well-being of mind and body. This enhances the capabilities of every individual in their respective field.

Many community institutions also work to establish health programmes that emphasise the importance of sports for all age groups, aiming to raise awareness of the importance of sports in improving public health and well-being.

The National Sport Day represents a bright milestone in the sports arena, marked by continuous activity in all sports, from athletics to equestrian sports, billiards, table tennis, and cycling, in addition to fitness exercises, track and field races, and various field games including throwing, running, and ball sports in all their disciplines (football, volleyball, basketball, handball, and indoor sports).

This day helps promote public health by encouraging physical activity, which helps prevent chronic diseases such as heart disease and diabetes, and improves mental health and quality of life. Health authorities also use this occasion to increase levels of physical activity, thereby supporting community well-being and promoting healthy behaviours.

Beyond its health benefits, the National Sport Day reflects Qatar's commitment to building a strong and balanced society. A wide range of activities are organised that bring individuals and families together in an atmosphere of co-operation and social cohesion, helping to spread a culture of sports for all. This initiative was seen as an important step toward improving quality of life and embedding a healthy and sustainable lifestyle for current and future generations.

Practicing sport on this occasion also provides an opportunity to discover the diverse abilities of members of the community, particularly younger age groups. With proper care and support, athletic skills and talents develop over time, while many abilities and competencies emerge that can later be refined and nurtured, allowing individuals (especially children) who take part in activities with their families on this day to excel in the sports they choose.

The fact that the National Sport Day has been firmly established over many years makes this year's edition markedly different compared to previous ones. Sport participation among community members is now accompanied by greater awareness and the ability to maintain a healthy lifestyle over the long term. This has turned Doha, with its public spaces, stadiums, and facilities, into a hub for co-operation and friendly competition among members of society, having moved beyond the initial stage of participation to a more advanced and committed adoption of a healthy sporting lifestyle.

The National Sport Day also has a significant impact on sport observers around the world, who view the initiative with great admiration and appreciation, as it targets a healthy society grounded in sport, which is considered a constant value underpinning both physical and mental well-being.

The concept of National Sport Day is regarded as one of the most important initiatives, serving as a strong safeguard for society by promoting physical and mental health, thereby enhancing productivity and elevating individuals to higher levels of social advancement.

Similar ideas to National Sport Day have since emerged in several countries, with a full day each year dedicated to sport. In this way, the Qatari initiative has achieved an impact that transcends borders, reflecting its sound principles and strong commitment to a healthy way of life. (QNA)

Adding to the NSD atmosphere, a small-scale kite festival will take place at Terminal Park, creating a colourful and festive experience for families and children throughout the day.

Through these NSD celebrations and the closing of MOVE, Old Doha Port continues to champion community well-being, sports accessibility, and inclusive outdoor experiences, bringing six days of sports and wellness programming to a dynamic close.

The MOVE sports festival has laid a strong foundation for future sports and community-driven events at Old Doha Port. The festival underscored the Qatar National Vision 2030's Human Development goals by encouraging physical activity, promoting health awareness, and fostering community engagement, reinforcing movement as a way of life for visitors of all ages.

Arab states slam Israel as it expands powers in occupied West Bank

Reuters

Ramallah/Jerusalem

Sunday's decisions by Israel's security cabinet will make it easier for Jewish settlers to buy land in the West Bank and give Israeli authorities more power to act in areas supposedly under full Palestinian control, two senior Israeli ministers said.

One of them, Finance Minister Bezalel Smotrich, said in announcing the decisions that the government would not allow the idea of a Palestinian state.

A joint statement by foreign ministers of Middle Eastern and some other Muslim countries, including Egypt and Turkey, denounced the decisions as a violation of international law that would undermine the vision of a two-state solution as well as stability in the region.

They said the moves meant to entrench Israeli settlement of the West Bank, displacing Palestinians and imposing unlawful Israeli sovereignty there. Annexing the territory has long been a priority of far-right parties in Netanyahu's coalition.

Most nations have long backed the creation of a Palestinian state alongside Israel as the best way to resolve the generations-old conflict and see the West Bank, which Israel has occupied since 1967, as the largest part of that future state.

Israeli Defence Minister Israel Katz and Smotrich issued a joint statement explaining the decisions of the five-member security cabinet, which were not published in full.

The security cabinet decided to repeal a law dating from Jordan's control of the West Bank before 1967 to make land registries public rather than confidential, and to remove a requirement for a permit from a civil administration office.

They said these moves would make it easier for Jews to purchase land in the West Bank.

Hagit Ofra from the Israeli settlement watchdog group Peace Now said the decision was barred by international law and represented a step towards annexation of the West Bank.

"The decision to allow every Israeli the right to buy land in the West Bank without government approval, without inspection, is also another way of saying it's normal life. It's not occupied territories, it's like part of Israel," she said. Annexation is opposed by US President Donald Trump, who last year said he would not allow Israel to carry out such a step.

"It's not going to happen,"

Palestinians protest after Israeli soldiers blocked the entrance of the Nur Shams Palestinian refugee camp in the occupied West Bank, yesterday, demanding to be allowed to return to their homes from where they were expelled last year during an ongoing Israeli army operation.

Trump, who is expecting Netanyahu at the White House for a meeting tomorrow, said in September.

Katz and Smotrich also said the government had decided to expand monitoring and enforcement actions regarding water offences, damage to archaeological sites and environmental hazards to areas A and B of the West Bank. Under the Oslo interim peace accords of 1993, Area A was designated as under security control of the Palestinian Authority and Area B as under joint control with Israel. Most of the West Bank became Area C under full Israeli security control.

Those changes could allow the Israeli military to carry out demolitions of Palestinian property and prevent Palestinian development not only in Area C but throughout the West Bank, Peace Now said in a statement.

In Hebron, a West Bank city with extensive archaeological remains and a significant Israeli settler community, Palestinians voiced dismay at the decisions.

"It becomes easier to confiscate land, easier and faster to expand settlements and easier to demolish Palestinian homes," said Issa Amri, who heads an organisation in Hebron called Youth Against Settlements.

Israeli troops kill four fighters, farmer in Gaza

Reuters

Cairo

IIsraeli forces killed four fighters in Rafah in the southern Gaza Strip yesterday after they emerged from an underground tunnel and opened fire on troops, Israel's military said.

It described the attack on Israeli troops as a violation of the US-brokered ceasefire with the Palestinian Hamas group that went into force in Gaza last October and said it views it with the "utmost gravity."

Israel has responded to similar incidents in recent months by carrying out air strikes across the enclave in which dozens of people have been killed.

There was no immediate comment from Hamas, but some sources close to the group identified one of those killed as Anas Annashar, the son of a former senior Hamas politician.

Dozens of Hamas fighters have been trapped in tunnels under Rafah since the ceasefire, and some have since been killed in clashes with Israeli forces.

In a separate incident, Israeli forces shot and killed a Palestinian farmer in Deir Al-Balah in the central Gaza Strip, according to local health authorities.

Israel did not immediately comment on the incident.

Palestinians displaced during the two-year Israeli offensive, shelter at a tent camp in Gaza City, yesterday.

Violence has repeatedly shaken the ceasefire and the two sides have traded blame over truce violations as Washington presses them to proceed to the next phases of the ceasefire deal, meant to end the conflict for good.

The next phase of President Donald Trump's Gaza plan calls for resolving complex issues such as Hamas disarmament, which the group has long rejected, a further Israeli withdrawal from Gaza and the deployment of an international peacekeeping force.

The Gaza health ministry said at least 580 Palestinians had been killed by Israeli fire since the October ceasefire deal was agreed. Israel says four soldiers had been killed by fighters in Gaza over the same period.

The Gaza war started with the October 2023 Hamas storming of southern Israel. The death toll in Gaza now stands at over 71,000, according to Palestinian health ministry data.

Iran says it could dilute enriched uranium if all sanctions are lifted

Reuters

Dubai

Iran could agree to dilute its most highly enriched uranium in exchange for all financial sanctions being lifted, its atomic chief said yesterday, one of the most direct indications so far of its position at talks with Washington.

US and Iranian diplomats held talks through Omani mediators in Oman last week in an effort to revive diplomacy, after US President Donald Trump positioned a naval flotilla in the region raising fears of new military action.

The talks follow a crackdown on anti-government demonstrations in Iran last month when thousands of people were killed, the biggest domestic unrest since the 1979 Revolution.

Trump joined an Israeli bombing campaign last year and hit Iranian nuclear sites. He also threatened last month to intervene militarily during the protests but ultimately held off.

Washington has demanded Iran relinquish its stockpile – estimated last year by the UN nuclear agency at more than 440kg – of uranium enriched to up to 60% fissile purity, a small step away from the 90% that is considered weapons grade.

The head of Iran's Atomic Energy Organisation, Mohammad

A man cycles past a mural and a giant billboard in Palestine Square, in Tehran, yesterday.

Eslami, said yesterday: "The possibility of diluting 60% enriched uranium... depends on whether, in return, all sanctions are lifted or not". Eslami, whose remarks were reported by Iran's ISNA news agency, said however that another proposal, sending Iran's highly enriched uranium abroad to another country, had not been discussed at the talks with US officials.

Ali Larjani, a close adviser to Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and secretary of its national security council, will visit Oman today following the US-Iranian talks there, the semi-official Tasnim news agency reported.

"During this trip, (Larjani) will meet with high-ranking officials of the Sultanate of Oman and discuss the latest regional and international developments and bilateral cooperation at various levels," Tasnim said.

The date and venue of the next round of talks have yet to be announced. Iran's President Masoud Pezeshkian said yesterday that a new round of talks would be "an appropriate opportunity for a fair and balanced resolution of this case," and that a desired outcome could be reached if the US avoids maximalist positions and respects its commitments.

Iran would continue to demand the lifting of sanctions and insist on its nuclear rights including enrichment, he said.

GCC secretary-general condemns Israel for law violations in West Bank

Secretary-General of the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC), Jasem Mohamed Albudaiwi, affirmed that the illegal and unilateral measures being carried out by Israeli occupation forces to impose sovereignty over the occupied West Bank constitute a clear violation of international law, relevant UN resolutions, and existing agreements, QNA reported from Riyadh.

In a statement yesterday, the GCC secretary-general strongly condemned the illegal decisions and actions announced by Israeli occupation forces in occupied West Bank, noting that they include attempts to impose unilateral facts that contradict the principles of international law and relevant international legitimacy resolutions. Albudaiwi called on the international community to assume its legal responsibilities and take firm positions to halt these violations and ensure respect for international humanitarian law. He also reiterated the GCC's steadfast position regarding the Palestinian people's right to establish an independent state on the borders of June 4, 1967, with East Jerusalem as its capital, in accordance with UN resolutions and the Arab Peace Initiative, and to achieve their aspirations to live with dignity and peace.

Lebanon's Tripoli building collapse death toll reaches 15

Reuters

Tripoli

The death toll from the collapse of residential buildings in the Lebanese city of Tripoli rose to 15 after search and rescue operations ended, Lebanon's National News Agency said yesterday citing the civil defence chief.

Civil defence director general Imad Kheireddin said rescue teams rescued eight people from the rubble of the collapsed buildings in the northern city's Bab al-Tabbaneh neighbourhood.

Officials said on Sunday that two adjoining buildings had collapsed.

Abdel Hamid Karimeh, head of Tripoli's municipal council, said he could not confirm how many people remained missing. Earlier, the head of Lebanon's civil defence rescue service said the two buildings were home to 22 residents.

A number of ageing residential buildings have collapsed in Tripoli, Lebanon's second-largest city, in recent weeks, highlighting deteriorating infrastructure and years of neglect, state media reported, citing municipal officials.

Karimeh said the issue of unsafe buildings in Tripoli was longstanding and driven by multiple factors, including construction violations, years of disorder, weak oversight and a lack of regular maintenance, partly linked to restrictive rent control laws that discourage owners from investing in repairs.

He said many buildings in the city were between 60 and 70 years old and had exceeded their structural lifespan without undergoing essential maintenance, increasing the risk of collapse.

The problem, he added, exceeded the capacity of the municipality and residents alone, calling for direct state intervention.

Authorities have begun providing temporary shelter to displaced families, while Lebanon's Higher Relief Committee is offering housing allowances for up to three months, Karimeh said.

He added that charities, the Ministry of Social Affairs and international organisations were co-ordinating to provide assistance, saying the aim was to secure a minimum acceptable level of support for affected households.

Somalia, Saudi sign defence pact

AFP
Moqadishu

Somalia yesterday signed a defence agreement with Saudi Arabia.

The region, strategically located between the Indian Ocean and the Suez Canal on one of the world's busiest trade routes, has increasingly attracted the interest of the Gulf states.

The agreement comes a month and a half after Israel recognised so-called Somaliland, a self-proclaimed republic that seceded from Somalia in 1991 but which Mogadishu still considers to be under its control.

Somali Defence Minister Ahmed Moallim Fiqi and his Saudi counterpart, Prince Khalid bin Salman, signed a "military co-operation agreement" yesterday, according to a message on X from the Somali defence ministry.

"This agreement further strengthens defence and military co-operation between the two nations, while covering various areas of mutual interest for both countries," it said.

In a separate post on X, Salman added he had "signed and witnessed the signing" of "several" agreements on the sidelines of a military exhibition in Riyadh. He did not provide further details.

Uganda minister condemns military raid on opposition leader's home

Reuters
Nairobi

Uganda's Information Minister Chris Baryomunsi condemned a military raid on opposition leader Bobi Wine's home last month, telling Reuters that the popstar-turned-politician had not committed any crime and was free to return there.

Wine has been in hiding for weeks after fleeing his home in the capital, Kampala, hours before he was announced the runner-up to President Yoweri Museveni in the January 15 presidential election.

On January 24, Wine said his wife had been taken to hospital after soldiers invaded their residence, alleging that they partially undressed and choked her.

He declined to say if security personnel would face any penalties if they were found to have violated the law.

A spokesperson for Wine's National Unity Platform party did not respond to calls or messages requesting comment.

Uganda's military chief, Muhozi Kainerugaba, who is also Museveni's son, denied soldiers assaulted Wine's wife, but later said on X that they had "captured and then released" her. Baryomunsi, who is also a spokesperson for the government, said the authorities would investigate the incident.

"We do not condone any acts of indiscipline on the side of the army and security forces," he said in an interview. "So invading his (Wine's) home, causing damage, assaulting his wife, or anybody is wrong."

Rights groups and the opposition have long accused the government of Museveni, who has been in power for four decades, of using the military to suppress dissent, accusations the government denies.

Baryomunsi also said that Uganda had no plans to withdraw its military contingent from an African Union mission to fight militants in Somalia, contradicting recent comments from Kainerugaba, who last week threatened in a post on X to pull troops out of Somalia over financing issues.

China rejects US claims of secret nuclear tests

China yesterday denied US allegations it had conducted secret nuclear explosive tests, calling them "outright lies" and accusing Washington of making excuses to start up its own trials. At the UN Conference on Disarmament in Geneva on Friday, Thomas DiNanno, US under secretary of state for arms control accused China of conducting the tests, including one on June 22, 2020, and of preparing for more tests with massive yields. "The US allegations are completely groundless and are outright lies. China firmly opposes the US attempt to fabricate excuses for its own restarting of nuclear tests," China's ministry of foreign affairs said. - AFP

Third impeachment case filed against Sara Duterte

Members of the Philippine clergy yesterday filed an impeachment complaint against Sara Duterte, the third to hit the country's vice-president in just over a week. The daughter of former president Rodrigo Duterte was impeached by the House of Representatives last year only to see the country's Supreme Court throw the case out over procedural issues. Yesterday's filing accuses Duterte of bilking taxpayers of at least $10mn while serving as vice-president and as secretary of education. "This is not political, we are not politicians," Reverend Joselito Sarabia, a Catholic friar and one of the complainants, said. - Reuters

New Zealand's Christchurch killer appeals conviction

A white supremacist who shot and killed 51 people at two New Zealand mosques in 2019 yesterday launched an appeal seeking to overturn his conviction. Brenton Tarrant, an Australian former gym instructor, admitted carrying out New Zealand's deadliest modern-day mass shooting before being sentenced to life in jail in August 2020. But the convicted killer now argues "torturous and inhumane" detention conditions during his trial made him incapable of making rational decisions when he pleaded guilty. Tarrant is being held in a specialist unit for prisoners of extreme risk at Auckland Prison, seldom interacting with inmates or other people. - AFP

Pressure on UK govt to name agent who worked inside IRA

The UK government was under growing pressure yesterday to reveal the identity of a British army agent who carried out killings and torture while undercover with the Irish Republican Army. A parliamentary committee yesterday called on the government to name the agent, known only as "Stakeknife", who led an IRA death squad known as a "nutting squad". The agent operated inside the IRA in Northern Ireland in the 1970s during "The Troubles", the decades-long conflict in Northern Ireland in which more than 3,500 people were killed. The team Stakeknife led was tasked with interrogating and killing suspected traitors and informers. - AFP

Starmer refuses to heed calls to quit over fallout from Epstein scandal

Reuters
London

British Prime Minister Keir Starmer yesterday refused to heed calls to quit, even by the leader of his party in Scotland, after a second aide resigned from a team in crisis over the appointment of Peter Mandelson as ambassador to Washington. Under pressure over the appointment of a man whose close ties to the late US sex offender Jeffrey Epstein have come into full focus, Starmer has attempted to change the narrative.

But a demand from Anas Sarwar, leader of the Scottish Labour Party, for him to quit and the departure of a second senior aide in as many days did little to stop the questions over his judgment and ability to govern.

The resignation of communications chief Tim Allan followed the exit of Starmer's closest aide, Morgan McSweeney, who said he took responsibility for advising on the appointment of Mandelson to Britain's top diplomatic role in the US.

Earlier yesterday, the British leader sought to raise spirits and encourage unity when he addressed staff at his Downing Street office, and he later received messages of support from his top ministers and some potential leadership rivals.

"We must prove that politics can be a force for good," he told them, praising McSweeney as a "friend" who helped change the Labour Party and win the 2024 national election with one of the largest parliamentary majorities in modern British history.

"I believe it can. I believe it is. We go forward from here. We go with confidence as we continue changing the country."

But Sarwar, speaking in Scotland where Labour has seen its support slump since the 2024 election, said it was with a heavy heart that he had to defend Scotland and call for a change of leader in the UK capital London.

"The distraction needs to end and the leadership in Downing Street has to change," he told a press conference.

In response, a Downing Street spokesperson said Starmer had "a clear five-year mandate from the British people to deliver change, and that is what he will do".

With his statement, Sarwar became the most senior Labour figure to call for Starmer's resignation, and did little to quell a febrile mood in parliament in London's Westminster.

Government borrowing costs rose, reflecting investors' concerns that a more left-wing Labour leader, who was willing to borrow and spend more, could take over. The climb in yields, along with the value of the pound against the euro, later eased after the potential successors came out in Starmer's support.

With Starmer losing his fourth director of communications, his record in government is under scrutiny, including the gaffes and policy U-turns that have tainted his almost two years in power.

"It's painful," said one Labour lawmaker on condition of anonymity. "It's like watching a fatal car crash in slow motion."

But Starmer received a show of support from his deputy, David Lammy, Finance Minister Rachel Reeves and Foreign Minister Yvette Cooper, among others. Angela Rayner, his former deputy who is seen as a leading leadership candidate, offered him her "full support".

"I urge all my colleagues to come together, remember our values and put them into practice as a team. The prime minister has my full support in leading us to that end," she said on X.

With McSweeney's departure on Sunday, Starmer had hoped to reset the narrative and attempt to return to an agenda he has so far failed to keep any focus on - tackling the cost-of-living crisis and boosting the British economy.

China critic Jimmy Lai sentenced to 20 years jail

Reuters
Hong Kong

Hong Kong's most vocal China critic, media tycoon Jimmy Lai, was yesterday sentenced to 20 years in jail, ending the city's biggest national security case that has fuelled global concerns about Beijing's clampdown on freedoms in the ex-British colony.

Lai's sentence on two counts of conspiracy to collude with foreign forces and one for publishing seditious materials ends a legal saga that has lasted nearly five years. The 78-year-old British citizen had denied all the charges against him, telling the court he was a "political prisoner" facing persecution from Beijing.

Lai, founder of the feisty and now shuttered Apple Daily newspaper, was first arrested in August 2020 and was convicted last year.

His sentence was within the harshest penalty tier for offences of a "grave nature", reflecting the fact that he was the driving force behind "persistent" foreign collusion conspiracies, the three judges said in announcing their verdict. They cited prosecution evidence that the conspiracies had sought sanctions, blockades and other hostile acts from the US and other countries while involving a web of individuals including Apple Daily staff, activists and foreigners.

Six former senior Apple Daily staffers, an activist and a paralegal were also sentenced to jail terms ranging from six to 10 years.

"In the present case, Lai was no doubt the mastermind of all three conspiracies charged and therefore he warrants a heavier sentence," the judges said.

Farm unions vow to fight India-US trade pact

Reuters
New Delhi

Indian farm unions and opposition parties have called for nationwide protests against the new India-US trade framework, saying it risks hurting the farm sector by allowing more US imports, although the government says key staples are protected.

The agreement has become a political flashpoint, reviving memories of the 2020-21 farm law protests, when the government was forced to repeal three laws aimed at deregulating agricultural markets.

The government has defended the pact, saying farmers' interests are protected by excluding imports of grains such as rice, wheat, corn and dairy products, while growers of basmati rice, fruits, spices, coffee and tea would gain duty-free access to the US market.

Farm groups say the pact puts Indian farmers at a disadvantage.

"We are worried about the India-US trade deal, as it would hurt Indian farmers, who are far more vulnerable than their American counterparts," said Rakesh Tikait, a farmers' leader.

He said US farmers have larger landholdings and receive higher subsidies, while Indian farmers also face crop losses from weak processing infrastructure and rising cultivation costs.

The Samyukta Kisan Morcha (SKM), a coalition of more than 100 farm groups, has called for protests on February 12, saying the deal would allow imports of subsidised US farm products that could depress domestic prices and hurt rural incomes.

India to maintain multiple sources of energy supply

India plans to maintain multiple sources of energy supply and diversify them when needed as New Delhi looks to ensure consumers receive "adequate energy at the right price through reliable and secure supplies". Indian Foreign Secretary Vikram Misri said yesterday. Misri was responding to a question seeking clarity on India's position on the purchase of Russian oil after US President Donald Trump said New Delhi had "committed to stop directly or indirectly" importing it. India's priority is to safeguard the interests of its consumers through an energy policy driven by adequate availability, fair pricing, and reliability of supply, Misri said. India is neither dependent on any single source for crude oil nor does it "intend to be", importing from a "mix of sources" depending on "objective market conditions", he said, adding "national interests" guide both the government and energy companies. - Reuters

Nepal readies for elections

Bangladesh poll rivals rally on final day of campaign

AFP
Dhaka

Bangladesh's election campaign ended yesterday ahead of this week's vote, with rival parties invoking the 2024 uprising that ended the autocratic rule of Sheikh Hasina.

Tens of thousands of flag-waving supporters attended a succession of rival rallies across the sprawling capital Dhaka, as parties sought to harness the legacy of the mass uprising and pitch competing visions of change for the country of 170mn in Thursday's election.

The nation will elect a 350-seat parliament, with the Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) - led by Tarique Rahman, who returned in December after 17 years in exile - widely tipped as a frontrunner.

The BNP's key rival is Jamaat-e-Islami, Bangladesh's largest Islamist party that is led by Shafiqur Rahman and has allied with the National Citizen Party (NCP) that was formed by student leaders who spearheaded the uprising.

Tarique Rahman appeared confident as he bounced on stage to address a crowd of thousands of BNP loyalists who waved flags and the party symbol, a sheaf of rice, and greeted their leader as if at a rock concert.

"The BNP alone has a plan to run the country and the experience to do so," he said, referring to his late parents, Ziaur Rahman and Khaleda Zia, who both led the nation.

"No other parties have that."

Tarique Rahman, 60, better known in Bangladesh as Tarique Zia, assumed leadership of the BNP from his mother, Khaleda Zia, who died in December at the age of 80.

Police ringed the stage as he spoke and watched from the tops of tower blocks surveying the crowd.

In his closing speech for the campaign, broadcast on state television, he also reached out to the 10% of Bangladeshis who are not Muslim - the majority of which who are Hindus.

"Bangladesh is a land of Muslims, non-Muslims, agnostics, and people from both the plains and the hills," he said.

Hasina was overthrown on August 5, 2024, after 15 years in power and her Awami League party was banned by the interim government from running in the elections, a move criticised by rights groups.

The 78-year-old, known for her iron-fisted rule, was sentenced to death in absentia in November for crimes against humanity for the deadly crackdown on protesters in her failed bid to cling to power and remains in hiding in India.

Jamaat-e-Islami chief Shafiqur Rahman, 67, leading a coalition of Islamist parties - under the symbol of weighing scales - also headed packed rallies.

"If Jamaat comes to power, extortion and violence will reduce," said Ashikuzzaman Shaon, a 21-year-old student. "They'll establish justice."

The Jamaat chief has accused the former ruling party of widespread repression, but also warned that new forms of abuse had quickly followed its fall, alleging extortion and corruption by returning political figures.

"We want to build a country of unity with everyone on board," he said yesterday, in a speech broadcast on state television. "It will be a country where nobody gets the driving seat because of their family background."

If successful, the former political prisoner could form the first Islamist-led government in constitutionally secular Bangladesh.

Jamaat's ally, NCP leader Nahid Islam, has also accused major parties of quietly sharing the "businesses of extortion and crime" for decades.

"If you elect me, I will dedicate myself to the betterment of the area," Islam said, thanking women supporters.

Will Thailand's general election deliver a stable government?

The ruling Bhumjaithai Party scored a decisive victory in Thailand's general election, routing progressive and populist parties to put leader Anutin Charnvirakul in the running to become the first premier voted back to office in 20 years.

Bhumjaithai grabbed and retained a sizeable lead in early vote counting, despite opinion polls that favoured the liberal People's Party, whose leaders, along with those of the Pheu Thai party, had conceded early.

It expanded in the south and grabbed seats in the vote-rich northeast held for nearly two decades by the billionaire Shinawatra family's once dominant Pheu Thai. Bhumjaithai had about 193 of 500 parliamentary seats from 94% of polling stations, Reuters calculations based on election commission data show, well over its tallies of 51 and 71 in 2019 and 2023 elections respectively.

Despite a clean sweep of the capital Bangkok, People's Party was a distant second with 118 seats, and Pheu Thai at 74, in its worst electoral performance.

Although Bhumjaithai lacks an outright majority, its 193 seats give Anutin plenty of bargaining power. Clearing away one obstacle, the People's Party said on Sunday it would not form a competing alliance.

Apart from the big three parties, about a dozen smaller ones are set to win 117 seats, from Kla Tham, with 58, to Palang Pracharat, with 5. As part of Anutin's minority government, those two alone would yield him a slender majority.

A Pheu Thai-Bhumjaithai alliance is possible, even though Anutin manoeuvred against it after abandoning the coalition of the former ruling party last year, to become premier following a court's sacking of predecessor Paetongtarn Shinawatra.

With his party on the rise and his credentials as an astute but wily dealmaker wielding clout among conservatives and royalists, Anutin is set to draw defectors and many smaller parties. The size of Bhumjaithai's win consolidates power to enable better governance if Anutin can manage Thailand's stuttering economy and balance the interests of big business groups and powerful institutions.

Anutin would probably be backed by Thailand's influential establishment and military, the key protagonists in a lengthy power struggle that thwarted two progressive forerunners of the People's Party and toppled in coups and court rulings six populist prime ministers from, or backed by, the Shinawatra family.

Anutin's gamble on dissolving parliament amid a fierce conflict with Cambodia seems to have paid off as he rode a wave of months-long nationalism and campaigned heavily on defending national sovereignty while portraying rivals as unpatriotic.

Though premier for fewer than 100 days, his recruitment of technocrats and poaching of respected politicians from other parties let him project his party as a capable steward of the economy, against an untested People's Party and a Pheu Thai that had failed to deliver.

Parliament must gather to elect a speaker and choose the new prime minister 15 days after the result is certified by the election commission, which it has 60 days to do. Any party with more than 25 seats can nominate a prime ministerial candidate for the vote in parliament, but such a contestant would have to gain the support of more than half of the 500 lawmakers before forming a cabinet.

If the vote is unsuccessful, the house must convene again and repeat the procedure until a premier is chosen. A spokesperson for the Bhumjaithai-led government said he expected a new administration would be in place by the end of April.

Voters in Thailand's general election on Sunday overwhelmingly voted for a referendum calling for a new constitution to replace a 2017 charter. The referendum is the outcome of a decades-long struggle between the pro-military royalist establishment and popular democratic political movements. Those backing change say the current military-backed charter entrenches unelected power, weakening democratic checks and civil liberties.

The referendum drew 60% support and 32% against, the election commission reported, with 94% of polling stations counted. — Reuters

Chasing winds, command, and the sailor's calling

Pakistan Navy captain's memoir sails from cricket to the Black Sea

By Malik Waqas Farooq
Karachi

About a year ago, I was part of a conversation with a few sailing enthusiasts who spoke with evident pride about a book then being written in Pakistan. It chronicled the story of a sailing ship operated by the Pakistan Navy — PNS Rah Nawar, the Navy's tall ship — and its remarkable 2014 voyage from Pakistan to the Black Sea.

Their anecdotes were rich with the romance of the sea: high-seas challenges, the discipline of life under sail, and the rare blend of maritime tradition and modern naval diplomacy. The discussion was captivating.

I thoroughly enjoyed those fragments. They carried an inspiring rhythm, moving between the thrill of wind-powered adventure and the deeper lessons of leadership and command. There was a strong old-school naval ethos running through them, accompanied by reflections on perseverance and teamwork. I remember thinking then that such an epic voyage deserved more than to remain oral lore among sailors. It needed to be captured in a proper book.

After reflecting on those conversations, I found myself hoping for the complete narrative. The officer behind the voyage had clearly lived something extraordinary, and while the casual stories were engaging, they hinted at a much richer account waiting to be told.

It was therefore a genuine pleasure when, recently, the finished book — In Quest of the Winds — finally appeared. The title itself was evocative. I assumed it referred to the sailor's eternal pursuit of favourable winds, both literal and metaphorical: the breezes that move a ship and the forces that propel a career forward.

The author's interpretation, however, goes deeper.

Commodore Humayun explains that the "winds" represent the unpredictable elements encountered during the ocean-crossing voyage — forces that test a sailor's skill, judgment, and resolve. Throughout the book, winds symbolise challenge itself: sought after, respected, and sometimes feared, as calm seas can turn hostile without warning. In this sense, In Quest of the Winds reads almost as a meditation on the pursuit of excellence.

The subtitle immediately draws the reader in: The story of a Pakistan Navy Captain rising from a middle-order batsman to lead a tall (sail) ship into the Black Sea Regatta. The dedication is equally telling, paying tribute to a mother whose determination shaped the author's course and a father whose optimism and versatility guided his voyage.

The book delivers a winning formula. It is robust and engaging, composed of episodes drawn from the author's life and career, narrated with clarity, restraint, and quiet determination.

Author: Commodore Azfar Humayun

Strategy, reflection, and tenacity are balanced naturally, offering a panoramic view of naval life from youth to senior command.

Humayun begins with childhood memories — street cricket rivalries in Malir, a chance encounter with an "extra form" that redirected him from a career in engineering to the Pakistan Naval Academy, and the demanding realities of cadet training. As a young officer, he recounts the tension of early days aboard destroyers and the challenges of leadership under pressure.

The heart of the narrative lies in the voyage undertaken to participate in the Black Sea Regatta 2014; a 138-day Odyssey. Here, the reader sails through piracy-threatened waters off Somalia, gale-force winds in the Red & Aegean Seas, and the nuanced world of naval diplomacy in ports ranging from Salalah to Novorossiysk. As Captain, Humayun leads his crew through Mediterranean storms and competitive racing in the Black Sea. Each episode carries a lesson — sometimes hard-earned — on command, teamwork, and decision-making.

The supporting cast is vividly drawn: a steadfast navigator detecting cyclones and shallow waters, a resourceful Marine Engineer Officer keeping vital systems running mid-voyage, and eager trainees climbing masts for the first time. There is an overconfident pilot in Izmir, a borrowed barber from an escorting destroyer, and the ever-present forces of weather that shadow the ship like silent adversaries. Above all, the collective spirit of the crew emerges as a central strength.

The narrative shifts smoothly between tactical details and reflective insights. Near-disaster looms during a close call in Izmir, where overconfidence nearly leads to grounding. Elsewhere, the sea reveals its indifference, reminding the reader that mastery is always temporary.

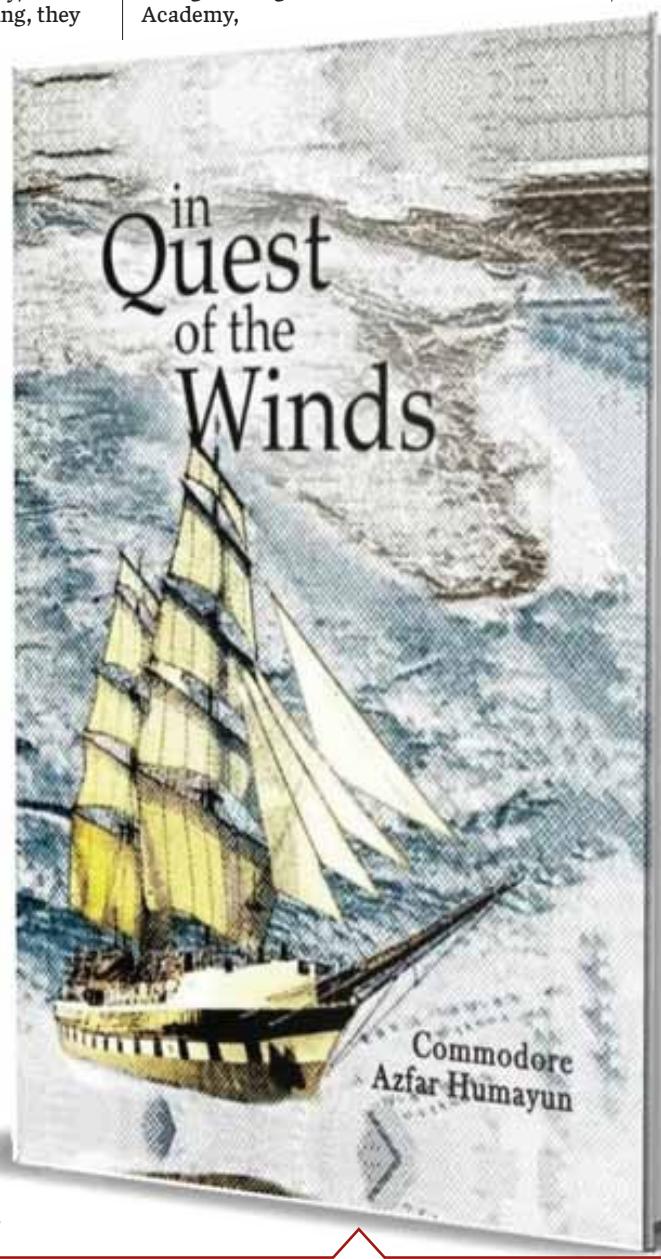

Throughout the book, we glimpse a Pakistan Navy that is professional, adaptable, and quietly inspiring. The episodes feel like moments frozen in time — snapshots from a voyage that remains epic even as it feels distant. Even in action-packed chapters, Humayun's contemplative voice surfaces, hinting at deeper truths about resilience, purpose, and maritime diplomacy.

Reading between the lines, the sea's unforgiving nature is ever present: rising winds, mounting risks, and persistent uncertainty. The chapters on foreign ports, particularly Turkiye and Russia, describe cultural exchange, hospitality, bureaucratic challenges, and shared maritime heritage. Though drawn from a decade-old voyage, these encounters feel strikingly current and familiar.

In Quest of the Winds is, ultimately, a quintessential naval memoir — a story of pursuit in every sense. It fulfills precisely what those early conversations had promised. Commodore Humayun mines a rich seam of adventure with confidence and restraint.

The natural conclusion is to hope for a sequel — another volume that carries the story forward, charting the later chapters of a career well navigated and generously shared.

Machado ally 'kidnapped' after calling for Venezuela elections

Venezuelan Nobel peace laureate María Corina Machado said yesterday that armed government agents had "kidnapped" a close ally - hours after he was released from prison and demanded democratic elections. Machado said a group of heavily armed men in civilian clothes seized Juan Pablo Guanipa, 61, in the Los Chorros district of Caracas. The former National Assembly vice-president had walked out of jail Sunday as part of a slow-moving wave of releases of political prisoners. The Public Prosecutor's Office later confirmed Guanipa had been detained for violating the terms of his release and would be placed under house arrest, without providing more details. "They haven't told us where my father is or where he will be transferred," his son Ramon Guanipa said. "I demand proof of life for my father immediately. He didn't violate any of the conditions of his release, and we don't know where he is." Guanipa's arrest sent a chilling message to those pushing for democratic reforms, and for Machado, who is pondering a return to her homeland from exile in the United States. "We demand his immediate release," Machado said, alleging that his detention undermined promises to end decades of repression and one-party rule, but still asserting her determination to return to Venezuela. "This does not affect my return in the slightest. Quite the opposite," she insisted. During a few hours of freedom, Guanipa met relatives of political detainees and challenged authorities to respect the results of a 2024 election. The opposition is widely believed to have won that vote, but then-president Nicolas

Maduro claimed victory and remained in power. "You don't want to respect it? Then let's go to a (new) electoral process," Guanipa told AFP. Guanipa was first arrested in May 2025 on charges of "terrorism", money laundering and inciting violence, accusations rights groups say were widely used to silence critics under the Maduro administration. His renewed detention came on the eve of a landmark vote in Venezuela's National Assembly that would grant amnesty to political dissidents and others. Maduro was captured in a US special forces raid in Caracas on January 3, and spirited to the United States where he now faces trial. His replacement, former vice-president Delcy Rodriguez, has tentatively co-operated with the United States: promising a slice of Venezuela's vast oil reserves and a major political opening. Rights group Foro Penal said there have been nearly 400 prisoner releases since Rodriguez took charge, including 35 on Sunday. But reforms have been slow, and much of the military-backed government remains unchanged. (AFP)

French central bank chief Villeroy to leave early, Macron to pick successor

Reuters

Paris

Bank of France Governor François Villeroy de Galhau will stand down in June, more than a year before the end of his term, allowing President Emmanuel Macron to name his replacement before a 2027 presidential election that the far-right could win. Villeroy, 66, has been a consistent voice for lower interest rates in the European Central Bank's governing council, although analysts expect his successor to adopt a similar stance.

Villeroy announced his departure in a letter to the central bank's staff, saying he was leaving to lead a Catholic foundation supporting vulnerable youth and families. He had been due to stand down in October 2027. A source familiar with the matter said the timing of his departure was deliberate, aimed at ensuring continuity at the central bank and heading off any market jitters that could arise if a successor had to be chosen under a far-right presidency.

Polls show either eurosceptic far-right leader Marine Le Pen or her protege Jordan Bardella could win the next presidential election in spring 2027. "I made this important decision naturally and independently," Villeroy told central bank staff. "The time between now and the beginning of June is sufficient to organise my succession in peace." And he told Le Monde, "If I had been asked, I would have refused. It's a strictly personal decision." Macron's office did not immediately reply to a request for comment. Villeroy's successor would have a six-year term, renewable once, and must be approved by the finance commissions of the National Assembly and Senate.

Their term of office may be terminated early only if they become incapable of performing their duties or are guilty of serious misconduct, according to French law.

Lawmaker Jean-Philippe Tangy from the far-right Rassemblement National told Reuters the move was aimed at putting in place anti-RN allies in case there is a change of power and said it was "another step towards liberalism under Macron's regime." With Villeroy's departure, the ECB will lose one of its most outspoken policy doves. Villeroy has been consistently warning for months about the downside risks to inflation, most recently due to the euro's strength. "The victory over inflation has been won, and even though international uncertainties remain high, of course, monetary policy is in a good position with the ECB," he told staff.

French Finance Minister Romain Lescure said Villeroy's actions "have always been guided by rigour, independence and concern for the public interest."

Governors of the Bank of France usually have previously spent time at the Treasury, which deals with many of the most sensitive issues within the French Finance Ministry. Two sources said that its current director Bertrand Dumont or past head Emmanuel Moulin would be good candidates, as well as Bank of France deputy governor Agnes Benassy-Quere or former ECB policymaker Benoit Coeure, both of whom have had positions in the Treasury.

Vance on tour to Armenia and Azerbaijan to 'advance' peace

AFP
Yerevan

US Vice-President JD Vance arrived in Armenia on Monday, before a scheduled trip to Azerbaijan, as Washington seeks to consolidate a peace process between the neighbours.

Vance is the most senior US official to visit Armenia, where he is also expected to advance a flagship project to improve road and rail infrastructure in the region.

His visit to Armenia - until recently a close Russia ally - comes as Moscow's influence has dwindled in the region since its 2022 invasion of Ukraine.

At a White House summit in August 2025, US President Donald Trump brokered an agreement between Armenia and Azerbaijan that saw the two countries commit to renouncing claims on each other's territory and refrain from using force.

The arch-foes have fought two wars over the Karabakh region in recent years. Azerbaijan finally seized the mountainous territory in a lightning offensive in 2023, ending three decades of rule by Armenian separatists.

On Monday, Vance held talks with Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan and will head to Azerbaijan's capital Baku on Tuesday.

"We are not just making peace for Armenia. We are also creating real prosperity for Armenia and the US together," Vance told a news conference alongside Pashinyan.

He announced a US drone technology sale to Armenia worth $11mn.

US Vice-President JD Vance and Armenia's Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan shake hands, as they attend a joint press conference, in Yerevan, Armenia, yesterday.

Pashinyan called the visit "truly historic" and said he had "great hope" that President Donald Trump would "rightfully" receive the Nobel Peace Prize for mediating the Armenian-Azerbaijani peace process.

The two also signed a civil nuclear energy agreement, which Pashinyan said "will open a new chapter in the deepening energy partnership between Armenia and the United States".

The US State Department said the visit would "advance President Donald Trump's peace efforts and promote the Trump Route for International Peace and Prosperity (TRIPP)".

The TRIPP is a proposed road-and-rail corridor designed to link Azerbaijan with its Nakhchivan exclave, cut off from the mainland by Armenian territory, while integrating the region into a wider east-west trade route connecting Central Asia and the Caspian basin to Europe.

Washington has presented the deal as a confidence-building measure following decades of conflict between the two countries.

Azerbaijan sees the opening of regional communications as the main precondition for signing a comprehensive peace treaty with its rival.

US Secretary of State Marco Rubio and Armenian Foreign Minister Ararat Mirzoyan announced in January an implementation framework for TRIPP, building on commitments made at the White House summit last year.

The framework stresses sovereignty, territorial integrity and reciprocity, while promising economic gains for both Armenia and Azerbaijan through expanded trade and transit.

US officials say the route would also strengthen regional connectivity and bolster American commercial interests by opening new supply chains that bypass Russia and Iran.

Few details of Vance's programme have been disclosed but the visit comes as Washington seeks a larger diplomatic and economic footprint in the South Caucasus and as regional alignments shift.

More than 20 Armenian human rights groups sent an open letter urging Vance to help secure the release of Armenian detainees in Azerbaijani jails.

A handful of Karabakh refugees held rally outside the meeting venue, urging Vance to press for the prisoners' release.

Last week, an Azerbaijani military court handed lengthy sentences, including life jail terms, to Armenian separatist leaders in a war crimes trial.

Armenia - historically Russia's outpost in the South Caucasus - has frozen its participation in a Moscow-led security pact and moved to deepen ties with the US and the European Union.

Russia's influence across the former Soviet Union has been strained since its invasion of Ukraine, which has spooked many of the countries that were for decades dominated by Moscow.

Vance will not go to Georgia, which was once Washington's key ally in the region.

Sweden plans to tighten rules for gaining citizenship

Sweden said yesterday it planned to tighten rules to acquire citizenship, introducing "honest living" and financial requirements, a language and general knowledge test and raising the residency requirement from five to eight years. If approved by parliament, the new rules would enter into force on June 6, Sweden's national holiday, and would apply even to applications already being processed. Under the new rules, those who have criminal records - in their home country or in Sweden - and who have served their sentence would have to wait up to 17 years before being allowed to apply for citizenship, up from the current 10 years. Following a large influx of migrants to Sweden during the 2015 migrant crisis, successive left- and right-wing governments have tightened asylum and migration rules. The country has for years struggled to integrate migrants, with many not learning the language and living in disadvantaged areas with higher crime and jobless rates. (AFP)

Spanish rail workers' unions end strike

Spain's main unions for rail workers called off a three-day nationwide strike, which was scheduled to start Monday, after authorities agreed to boost investments and reinforce staffing following a string of high-profile train accidents. In a statement, train drivers' union SEMAF said it had achieved all of its demands with a deal that addressed day-to-day safety concerns raised by drivers across all railway companies, including steps on infrastructure investment, working groups and safety procedures. Russia says gunman who shot general recruited by Kyiv

AFP
Moscow

Russia said yesterday that a gunman who shot and wounded a top Russian military intelligence officer in Moscow last week before fleeing to Dubai was acting on Kyiv's orders.

High-ranking general Vladimir Alekseyev was shot several times in his apartment block in Moscow and was hospitalized. There have been a string of assassinations of Russian army officials on Russian soil during Moscow's almost four-year Ukraine offensive.

Russia's FSB security service said that Russian citizen Lyubomir Korba, born in 1960, shot Alekseyev "on the orders of Ukraine's SBU" security services after being recruited and trained in Ukraine.

According to the FSB, Serebritskaya rented a flat in Alekseyev's building and gave Korba an entry pass into the block of flats.

Vasin, the FSB said, had rented a flat for Korba in Moscow and helped plan his movements. It accused Vasin of being a supporter of the late Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny.

Cuba warns airlines it will run out of jet fuel after Trump threats

AFP/Reuters
Havana

Cuba warned international airlines that jet fuel will no longer be available on the island beginning on Tuesday in the latest sign of fast-worsening conditions as the United States moves to cut off the communist-run nation's oil supply. The shortfall is set to last from February 10 through March 11, according to a Notice to Aviation (NOTAM) published late on Sunday, and comes just two days after top officials said air travel would not be impacted by a fuel rationing plan announced on Friday.

Cuba has historically relied on Venezuela to provide much of its jet fuel, but the Caribbean island nation has not received any crude or refined products from its top ally since mid-December, when the US moved to block the South American nation's exports. US President Donald Trump has since vowed Cuba would receive no more oil from Venezuela and has threatened to slap tariffs on any nation sending fuel to Cuba, effectively cutting off the island's supply of aviation gas. Such shortfalls are not new to Cuba and many airlines already have plans in place to deal with them. A similar crisis last year, as well as others recently, have prompted many carriers to refuel in nearby third countries, including Panama, the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic and the United States. Most airline flights into Havana appeared on time and on schedule on Monday morning. An early morning COPA airlines flight to Panama departed on time Monday, and several American Airlines flights were slated to arrive later in the day, airport officials confirmed. None of the major carriers serving Cuba have yet commented on the situation.

Meanwhile the Kremlin accused the United States on Monday of using "suffocating measures" against Cuba, a traditional Russian ally, as an energy crisis on the socialist Caribbean island worsened under US sanctions.

Cuba is reeling from a US-ordered halt in oil shipments from Venezuela after American troops captured Venezuelan leader Nicolas Maduro last month.

The Cuban government on Friday announced emergency measures to address the island's energy crisis, including a four-day work week for state-owned companies and fuel sale restrictions.

"The situation is really critical in Cuba," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters, including AFP.

"The suffocating measures imposed by the United States are causing many difficulties for the country. We are discussing possible solutions with our Cuban friends, at least to provide whatever assistance we can."

President Donald Trump also signed an executive order allowing his country to impose tariffs on countries selling oil to Havana.

Trump said that Mexico, which has been supplying Cuba with oil since 2023, would stop doing so under threat of US tariffs.

The oil shortages have threatened to plunge Cuba into complete darkness, with power plants struggling to keep the lights on.

Russia has rallied against the US campaign against Havana for weeks, calling it "unacceptable" and warning of a possible humanitarian crisis in the country.

Cuba has warned airlines it is suspending jet fuel supplies for a month, an official at a European carrier said Sunday.

Washington has long sought to overthrow or weaken the communist-led Cuban government.

Havana accuses Trump of wanting to "strangle" the island's economy, where power cuts and fuel shortages, already recurrent in recent years, have become even more acute.

Cuban President Miguel Diaz-Canel said his country was willing to hold talks with the United States, but not under pressure.

The day fog blanketed Doha, surroundings

By Kamran Rehmat

Doha

Doha and its surrounding regions woke up yesterday to a scene straight out of a dream: a thick blanket of fog and mist rolling across the landscape in the early morning hours.

The phenomenon, observed across much of Qatar, was the result of overnight meteorological conditions that included high relative humidity, light winds, and a drop in surface temperatures beneath mostly clear skies. These factors created the ideal environment for moisture near the ground to condense into countless suspended droplets, producing the hazy veil that transformed familiar cityscapes into soft silhouettes.

According to the Qatar Meteorology Department (QMD), horizontal visibility fell markedly across the country, with readings plunging below one kilometre in places and generally ranging between one and two kilometres during the period of peak fog intensity. The fog was widespread – enveloping both inland and coastal zones – signaling a broad-scale formation rather than localized pockets of mist.

Eyewitness accounts and photographs from early commuters depicted a surreal start to the day. Doha's iconic skyline became a subdued outline against the pale dawn, its towers softened by the low-lying fog. Along the Corniche and other waterfront stretches, the mist mingled with a faint haze, blurring the boundary between sea and sky. The ethereal atmosphere persisted until just after sunrise, when the day's warmth gradually dissolved the fog layer to reveal the crisp blue of a new morning.

Meteorologists explained that the event was a classic case of radiation fog: a type that develops when the ground cools faster than the air above it after sunset, allowing trapped surface moisture to condense. Such conditions tend to appear during Qatar's cooler months, particularly in late winter and early spring, when calm nocturnal winds limit air mixing. The QMD noted that a gradual warming trend expected through mid-February would likely shorten future fog episodes as rising temperatures reduce overnight condensation.

Authorities issued standard road safety reminders, urging motorists to proceed with caution during the hours of reduced visibility. Drivers were advised to lower speed, use dipped headlights instead of high beams, and maintain greater distances between vehicles to adapt to shortened sightlines on highways and arterial routes.

While fog of this nature is a familiar winter occurrence in Qatar, the spectacle never fails to transform the capital's rhythm – slowing commutes, softening the city's edges, and offering a fleeting glimpse of natural wonder amid the morning quiet.

Qatari group completes CultuHike expedition across the Andes

QNA
Santiago

A group of Qatari trekkers has completed a historic high-altitude traverse across the Andes, travelling from Argentina into Chile and concluding on the Pacific coast as part of CultuHike, a flagship people-to-people initiative delivered through Years of Culture.

The programme forms part of the legacy of the Qatar Argentina and Chile 2025 Year of Culture and reflects Qatar's commitment to international engagement under the framework of Qatar National Vision 2030. CultuHike is designed to foster cultural understanding through shared experience, bringing participants together on long-distance treks that encourage dialogue, reflection and meaningful exchange. Alongside its sister initiative CultuRide, the programme has become a central component of Years of Culture's experiential approach to cultural engagement, supporting the Vision's emphasis on human, social and cultural development.

HE Years of Culture Advisor on Latin American Affairs and Qatar's former Ambassador to Mexico Mohammed al-Kuwari, added: "CultuHike reflects the long-term vision of the initiative, which is to create lasting relationships between communities through collaboration and exploration. The legacy of each partnership is not measured only in events delivered, but in the connections that continue well beyond the programme year."

Following a trans-Andean route historically used by traders and local communities, participants spend several days navigating rugged terrain, remote valleys and high mountain passes. The physical demands of the journey create conditions that encourage co-operation and trust, allowing relationships to develop organically.

Commenting on the unique experience, Years of Culture Sports Lead and CultuHike and Culturide Creator Ali bin Towar al-Kuwari, said: "Programmes like CultuHike are designed to bring people together in environments where connection happens naturally. Shared physical challenges create space for open dialogue, mutual curiosity and genuine understanding. By stepping beyond familiar settings and engaging through collective effort, participants build relationships that go beyond the trail itself. This is how cultural exchange becomes meaningful and lasting."

During the opening stages of the trek, participants and local Argentine and Chilean guides exchanged knowledge spanning environmental practices, traditions and social customs. Discussions included Qatar's desert ecosystems and wildlife, medicinal plant traditions in South America, and the role of family structures in sustaining social cohesion.

Conversations around the role of women in community life prompted particularly meaningful dialogue, revealing shared values across cultures separated by geography yet connected through lived experience. Furthermore, linguistic connections also emerged along the trail.

Everyday words such as "sugar", "gato", "rice" and "olive" prompted conversation as similarities across Spanish, English and Arabic are recognised, highlighting centuries of cultural interaction and exchange. The evenings of the expedition concluded with communal reflection around campfires, allowing participants to share insights from the day's journey. These moments became a defining feature of the experience, encouraging reflection on resilience, personal growth and collective iden-

Ministry to host Russian Cultural Week at Darb Al Saai tomorrow

The Ministry of Culture will host the Russian Cultural Week at Darb Al Saai on Wednesday. The hosting of the Russian Cultural Week, which will run until February 14, comes within the framework of Qatar's vision to promote civilisational dialogue, broaden cultural exchange with countries around the world, and reinforce culture as a shared space for human interaction.

The Russian Cultural Week represents a significant milestone in the course of bilateral relations between Qatar and the Russian Federation, reflecting the positive development witnessed in these relations, particularly in the cultural field, which serves as one of the most prominent bridges of rapprochement and mutual understanding between peoples. The programme of the Russian Cultural Week includes a diverse range of activities showcasing the richness and diversity of Russian culture. Russian artistic and folk troupes will present heritage and musical performances, alongside exhibitions of artworks and handicrafts, workshops in drawing and visual arts, as well as live culinary experiences.

highlighting the uniqueness and diversity of Russian cuisine. These events provide the public in Qatar with an opportunity to closely engage with Russian cultural heritage and explore aspects of Russia's artistic and social identity, in an atmosphere that fosters cultural exchange and deepens dialogue between people. The Ministry of Culture affirmed its keenness for the Cultural Weeks season to serve as an effective platform for cultural openness and to reinforce Qatar's position as a hub for international cultural dialogue, contributing to the strengthening of bilateral relations with friendly and partner countries, and employing culture as a tool of cultural diplomacy to build bridges of communication and understanding among different cultures.
