SilTest Semiconductors plans foray into Qatar

By Santhosh V Perumal
Business Reporter

SilTest Semiconductors, a Germany-based deep-tech firm specialising in AI (artificial intelligence)-driven semiconductor testing and automation, is establishing operations in Qatar, where it also plans to establish an academy to nurture local talent.

The move marks a major step in the company’s global expansion and its entry into the Middle East. The company, which will be based in Qatar Science and Technology Park, will expand its work on advanced semiconductor test solutions, supporting customers and partners across the wider Middle East and North Africa region, Europe, Asia, and North America.

The decision follows a visit to Doha earlier in 2025 and direct engagement with Qatar’s innovation and investment ecosystem.

“After spending time in Doha and seeing the ecosystem firsthand, it became clear that this is the right place to build something lasting,” according to Samir Saran, founder and managing director of SilTest Semiconductors.

With the support of Invest Qatar, the Qatar Financial Centre (QFC), and the German Industry and Commerce Office Qatar, SilTest is making a long-term investment in talent, technology, and knowledge transfer. To Page 5

Growa’s intelligence layer behind Qatar’s food future

By Shaima Sheriff
Staff Reporter

At a time when food security dominates national agendas, Qatar-based agritech startup Growa is not building farms, it is building the intelligence system designed to power the country’s food future.

At Web Summit Qatar 2026, Growa’s co-founders spoke less about crops and more about clarity, arguing that the region’s biggest food security challenge is not land or climate, but data.

“We’re building the national food intelligence infrastructure for the government here in Qatar, and then beyond,” said Davide, co-founder and commercial director of Growa. “It’s not

For CEO and co-founder Gabriele, the issue is straightforward: governments are still making high-stakes food decisions without precise measurements.

“Data collection at the moment in Qatar and in the region is largely done manually,” he said. To Page 11

Where heritage meets future of global arts

How Qatar became Gulf’s beating heart of culture

By Ayman Adly
Doha

Qatar has established its global position as a soft power and major cultural powerhouse that embraces all forms of art whilst upholding its rich heritage, traditions, and culture, and hosting prestigious international arts events and exhibitions.

Over the past year, Qatar has poured considerable investment into culture, arts, and festivals, reflecting a deep commitment to preserving its heritage, nurturing creative talent, and fostering cultural exchange. Such prominent status has been achieved through strategic institutions, vibrant festivals, and innovative exhibitions.

Over the past 20 years, Qatar Museums has developed world class museums such as the Museum of Islamic Art (MIA), Mathaf: Arab Museum of Modern Art, the National Museum of Qatar (NMoQ), and the 3-2-1 Qatar Olympic and Sports Museum, among other world class facilities that promote and celebrate various forms of artistic works for both local and international artists. Over the years, these high-end institutions have served as active platforms for dialogue and creativity, promoting mutual understanding amongst different cultures and peoples through their arts productions.

Meanwhile, initiatives such as the Fire Station Artist in Residence, the Tasweer Qatar Photo Festival, and creative hubs such as M7 and Liwan Design Studios have been fostering emerging local talents and connecting local artists with international audiences, aiming to enhance the experiences of artists and help them expand their repertoire whilst exploring the wealth of international arts and culture they can easily access.

In addition, Qatar has been hosting a considerable number of related local, regional and international festivals that promote arts, culture and heritage whilst engaging the public in an interactive manner. To Page 5

The company has worked closely with these institutions to navigate market entry, establish its local presence, and connect with the broader business and innovation ecosystem.

A key pillar of the company's regional strategy is SilTest Academy, it's training and capability-building initiative designed to help develop a workforce ready for the semiconductor industry.

"Beyond serving customers, our goal is to contribute to ecosystem development," Saran said, adding "we believe that building local capabilities – engineering talent, operational know-how, and applied expertise – will be essential for attracting further semiconductor investment into the region."

SilTest Academy is its internal training hub, designed to teach engineers the skills the industry actually uses and its courses blend theory, application, and hands-on labs using actual ATE (automated test equipment) systems, not simulations. For university students and recent graduates, its courses provide real lab exposure and industry-aligned knowledge.

"Qatar stood out for its long-term vision and commitment to building real industrial and technological capabilities," according to Saran.

SilTest officials and partners in Doha after launch its operations in Qatar SilTest develops AI-powered platforms that improve productivity, yield, and quality in semiconductor product development and manufacturing.

Its technologies address a critical and often under-served part of the semiconductor value chain: testing, qualification, and production optimisation – areas that are becoming increasingly strategic as global supply chains evolve.

SilTest's expansion into Qatar aligns with the country's broader ambition to diversify its economy and strengthen its position in advanced, knowledge-based industries.

The company plans to work closely with regional partners, academic institutions, and industry stakeholders as it grows its presence.

"This is about building critical infrastructure for a more resilient global semiconductor ecosystem and doing it from a region that is actively shaping what comes next," according to him.

SilTest Semiconductors' platforms help semiconductor companies accelerate time-to-yield, reduce manual effort and errors, and scale engineering productivity across product development and manufacturing. SilTest works with customers across Europe and Asia and is expanding globally.

The Qatar semiconductor market is forecasted to achieve $8.6bn revenue by 2032, projecting a 17% compound annual growth rate between 2024 and 2032, according to DataCube Research.

"With a strong focus on Semiconductors, Qatar aims to position itself as a key player in the global semiconductor supply chain by fostering international collaborations and investing in advanced manufacturing capabilities," it said.

Qatar's efforts to strengthen its semiconductor industry align with its broader economic diversification strategy and Vision 2030 initiative.

By investing in Adrian Semiconductor and partnering with Turkiye for semiconductor manufacturing, Qatar is positioning itself to meet growing global demand for semiconductors, which is expected to double over the next decade, it had said.

2024 saw the partnership between Qatar's Hamad Bin Khalifa University (HBKU) and the Scientific and Technological Research Council of Türkiye (TÜBİTAK) to establish a chip investment project, where the machinery and equipment needed for the production line will be provided by HBKU.

Where heritage meets future of global arts

For instance, the 7th Qatar International Art Festival (QIAF), held in Katara Cultural Village, featured the participation of over 450 artists from more than 70 countries, showcasing more than 2,000 works ranging from traditional painting to contemporary installations and performance art. The festival, with its emphasis on sustainability and innovation, has established itself as an international hub of creativity and innovation.

Locally, Darb Al Saai, an annual cultural festival organised by the Ministry of Culture, celebrates Qatar's heritage and identity through activities spanning traditional music, falconry, camel riding, craft workshops, and immersive demonstrations of Bedouin life. The festival is held in celebration of Qatar National Day and has become a landmark event eagerly awaited by residents and tourists alike. Further, specialised festivals celebrating pearling heritage, falconry, and dhow sailing have highlighted practices that have been recognised by UNESCO as intangible cultural heritage. Such events have made huge popular successes, attracting people from all backgrounds and nationalities. Besides, Qatar strongly encourages the various communities living in the country to celebrate their traditional culture and heritage, with many community events and festivals organised all year round at venues such as Katara, Souq Waqif, and other venues across the country.

Meanwhile, Qatar has actively contributed to UNESCO's heritage listings, with joint registrations of traditional practices such as falconry, majlis (lounge) gatherings, Arabic coffee culture, and henna traditions in collaboration with other regional partners.

Similarly, the country has maintained an active programme of launching the Years of Culture initiative, where an annual collaboration with partner countries is made to promote their cultures through exhibitions, performances, and educational programmes, which further achieves the vision of the country for world peace and mutual understanding amongst different peoples of the world through arts and culture.

Doha International Book Fair, first launched in 1972, has become a global hub for publishers, authors and book enthusiasts, with considerable participation from a good number of Qatari authors and intellectuals. The fair features discussion forums, lectures and various interactive activities that promote creativity and free thinking.

Qatar has also made key achievements in the field of cinema and the film industry, with the launch of Doha Film Institute (DFI) in 2010 marking a turning point in the development of film culture in the country. Accordingly, DFI has supported films from Qatar, the Arab world, and other countries through active funding programmes, training workshops, and international co-productions. Eventually, some DFI-supported films have been screened and awarded at major international festivals, including Cannes, Berlin, Venice, and Toronto.

In addition, Ajyal Film Festival, launched in 2012, is designed to engage young audiences and combines film screenings with education, discussion, and cultural exchange. The festival features international and regional films, bringing filmmakers and audiences together in a participatory cultural experience that emphasises storytelling as a universal language. Other related initiatives include Qumra, an annual industry event organised by the Doha Film Institute, which connects emerging filmmakers with internationally acclaimed directors, producers, and mentors, fostering cross-border collaboration and professional development.

Finally, the launch of Art Basel Qatar in Doha, bringing global curators, galleries, and collectors to the city, has added to the various achievements of the country in the field and further cemented its reputation as a global hub for culture and arts, embracing all voices whilst promoting mutual understanding and peaceful co-existence.

Russian Cultural Week marks historic milestone in bilateral cultural diplomacy, says ambassador

By Amjad Vainimal
Staff Reporter

The opening of the Russian Cultural Week at Darb Al Saai marks a historic milestone in cultural diplomacy between Qatar and the Russian Federation, according to Dmitry Dogadkin, ambassador of Russia to Qatar.

"For the first time in the history of our bilateral relations, the friendly State of Qatar organises a Russian cultural event of such scale and magnitude on its soil," the ambassador said, describing the festival as a significant step forward in cultural diplomacy between the two countries.

Running until February 14, the Russian Cultural Week reflects the growing depth of cooperation between Moscow and Doha, built upon what ambassador Dogadkin described as an open and substantive political dialogue that has created a firm foundation for expanding economic, investment and cultural ties.

The envoy expressed deep appreciation to the Qatari authorities for their support in organising the event. "We highly appreciate the help of the Qatari authorities, first of all, the Ministries of Culture and Foreign Affairs, as well as all other governmental entities involved, in creating a favourable environment for this festive event here in Qatar," he said. Highlighting the festival's cultural significance, the ambassador noted that Russia's vast geography, spanning Europe and Asia from the Pacific Ocean to the Arctic, reflects a rich mosaic of peoples and traditions that have coexisted for centuries.

"The Russian Culture Days provide an excellent opportunity to venture into the heart of our country, famous for its great diversity. Visitors can witness traditional Russian and Caucasian dances and songs, authentic displays of our national cuisine and handicrafts," he said. The ambassador added that the

Earthna, Unido present research report for industrial policy in Qatar

Earthna Center for a Sustainable Future (Earthna), a member of Qatar Foundation (QF), and the UN Industrial Development Organisation (Unido) launched a new collaborative report, 'Industrial Policies for Economic Diversification in Qatar: A Research and Policy Agenda', during a session at the recently concluded Web Summit Qatar 2026.

The report outlines a research and policy agenda to support Qatar's economic diversification ambitions through industrial policy aligned with Qatar National Vision 2030, the Third National Development Strategy (NDS3), the Qatar National Environment and Climate Change Strategy, and the Qatar National Manufacturing Strategy 2024-2030. It emphasises the role of industrial policy in advancing export diversification, productivity growth, innovation, and climate-compatible development, particularly as Qatar works toward its Nationally Determined Contribution target of a 25% reduction in emissions by 2030.

Dr Gonzalo Castro de la Mata, executive director of Earthna, said: "Qatar's Third National Development Strategy offers a strategic platform for targeted industrial policies that advance sustainable economic growth and diversification through priority growth clusters and enabling reforms. To be effective, industrial policy must be co-designed with stakeholders, selective, and institutionally robust. This report lays the groundwork for structured engagement to develop robust programmes that build on global best practices to support Qatar's economic diversification agenda."

Gunther Beger, managing director of the Directorate for SDG Innovation and Economic Transformation, Unido, said: "Industrial policies can be the engine of a new era of prosperity, one that reconciles competitiveness with sustainability and inclusiveness. To achieve this, we need strong partnerships; governments, private sector leaders, and international organisations working together to mobilise investment, share knowledge, and scale innovation."

The report explores how Qatar can leverage industrial policy to build on an existing and evolving industrial base, new technologies and manufacturing strategies, and benefit from the income of its vast natural resources. The report also highlights Qatar's strong vision for economic development as articulated in its National Development Strategies. Qatar's unique position and financial independence mean it can reinvest its natural resources revenues into the green and blue economy to complement its diversification programmes.

To enable this shift, the report recommends embedding industrial policy more firmly within NDS3 and increasing the evidence base to help identify priority sectors geared toward international markets and mechanisms for strengthening public-private partnerships. The report also recommends leveraging institutions such as the QRDI Council and the Qatar Development Bank to mobilise investment, scale innovation, and address the skills gaps needed to develop a diversified, export-oriented economy.

exploration of the tangible beauty of jewellery through beadwork, rope patterns, weaving styles, and other textile-like details that enrich each creation; and finally, feeling the aura of heritage, centred on the fascination with the gleam and radiance of precious metals and stones that inherently reflect the brilliance and beauty of Ruhi jewellery. In truth, each of these experiences serves as a therapy for the senses.

On this occasion, we are delighted to welcome you and your loved ones to Devji Aurum to discover the latest creations from the Ruhi collection at the Al Fardan Boutique at Doha Festival City.

Novo Nordisk successfully concluded the iDOL Summit, titled "Reimagining Weight Management with Digital Opinion Leaders," held in Dubai from January 27 to 28.

The event marked the first initiative of its kind by a pharmaceutical company in the Middle East and Africa, bringing together digital opinion leaders, healthcare professionals, media representatives, digital creators and patient advocates from across the region.

Participants from Saudi Arabia, the UAE, Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, Oman, Egypt, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq explored how digital storytelling, evidence-based education and the responsible use of artificial intelligence (AI) can enhance public understanding of weight management.

The summit featured immersive discussions, practical workshops and hands-on content-creation sessions designed to strengthen credible and supportive online health communication.

Attendees engaged with real-life weight-management journeys, addressed challenges related to misinformation and tested innovative digital tools aimed at improving awareness. Discussions throughout the summit highlighted a collective commitment to promoting accurate, clear and empathetic health content in the digital space, where millions increasingly seek guidance and information.

Reflecting on the importance of bringing digital and clinical voices together, Burak Cem, vice-president for Novo Nordisk Business Area of Middle East and Central Asia, said: "At a time when the public increasingly turns to social platforms for information about weight management, it is essential that trustworthy voices work collaboratively. The Summit has shown the power of combining scientific knowledge, digital creativity and lived experience to create clearer, more responsible conversations that can truly support people in their health journeys."

Clinicians participating in the Summit also emphasised the need for accessible, patient-centred communication. Dr Ahmad Abdul Malak, a family physician and one of the event's key contributors, noted that "obesity is a chronic condition that requires understanding, not judgment. When healthcare professionals and digital creators come together, we have a unique opportunity to deliver messages that are medically sound yet relatable, helping people make sense of complex information at a moment when misinformation is widespread."

From the digital community, attendees highlighted how valuable it was to collaborate directly with medical experts. Dr Angie Kassabie, nutrition expert and a leading health DOL, shared that "this Summit created a safe and open space for honest discussion. Bringing creators, clinicians, and communicators together is exactly what the region needs to fight misinformation and help people access trustworthy content. I'm grateful for Novo Nordisk's effort in enabling this dialogue – it's a step forward for everyone who wants to use their platform responsibly."

As the summit concluded, Novo Nordisk, a leading global healthcare company founded in 1923 and headquartered in Denmark, reaffirmed its commitment to fostering long-term collaboration between healthcare professionals, digital creators and media stakeholders. QNA

Qatar Sports Club, represented by its Youth Apparatus, and the Ministry of Education and Higher Education (MoEHE), represented by the Arts and Theatre Section of the Educational Guidance Department, honoured the winners of the seventh Promising Playwright Competition, including students, teachers, and parents who participated in the contest, which covered all educational levels: primary, preparatory, and secondary.

The award ceremony was attended by Head of the Youth Department at Qatar Sports Club, Mohammed Abdulrahim al-Haydos, and Qasim Mohamed al-Shammari, Senior Visual Arts and Theatre Guidance Expert in the Educational Guidance Department at MoEHE, alongside a host of faculty members from the participating schools and the students' parents.

The competition intends to unlock the creative energies of young people in playwriting and encourage them to engage in authorship as a cultural and aesthetic activity that helps nurture the Qatari theatre movement.

Drawing over 140 students, the contest also aims to develop participants' artistic sense, hone their skills in this field, and strengthen the presence of theatre as a tool for intellectual and social expression in the community.

The concept of this competition is based on providing a competitive platform before a professional judging panel, ensuring a fair and professional evaluation based on clear technical standards, thereby contributing to translating winning texts into projects that are ready for production and performance, in a way that links the act of writing with the live theatrical experience.

The Promising Playwright Competition seeks to explore talents from childhood in collaboration with the MoEHE's Educational Guidance Department, al-Haydos affirmed to Qatar News Agency (QNA), adding that the contest took three months, starting from receiving applications from the participating students and evaluating them, culminating in crowning the winners after their texts had been calibrated and subjected to the judging process.

Al-Haydos described the texts as seminal, considering the ages of the participants, making it one of the most outstanding competitions that help nurture the theatre movement by discovering artistic talents.

Over the past years, the winners have achieved a prominent presence in a variety of artistic and theatrical events at home and abroad, underscoring the success of this contest in projecting promising talents capable of mastering theatrical tools, al-Haydos highlighted.

He pointed out that this success demonstrates that Qatar has a strong infrastructure in this artistic field, in terms of abundant actors, writers, and artists capable of producing exceptional artworks.

He commended the MoEHE's efforts in discovering and honing student skills in general, and those talented in theatrical education in particular, along with the Arts and Theatre Section, for their dedication to caring for and developing students.

Qasim Mohamed al-Shammari, told QNA that the competition significantly contributed to guiding students across different educational stages toward writing theatrical texts, whose themes were diverse and reflected their talents in writing.

He added that one of the primary objectives of the competition was to enhance students' self-confidence, as demonstrated during the dialogue session held as part of the award ceremony, during which students presented their theatrical texts before an audience.

This, he noted, reflects that the competition strengthened their self-confidence, public speaking, fluency, and performance, in addition to many other skills.

Regarding whether the winning students would participate in specialised workshops to further develop their talents, he affirmed that schools ensure the development of the artistic skills and talents of the winning students, supporting them to reach advanced artistic levels, thereby making them promising seeds for school theatre.

Ahmed Youssef al-Badr, member of the judging panel and theatre director, told QNA that the works of the students participating in this contest, which were received by the committee, were highly outstanding and encompassed all three educational stages.

He said that, notwithstanding the significant aptitudes demonstrated by the participants, they need to engage in professional playwright workshops, emphasising that the judging panel dealt transparently with students whose works reflected their ambitions to potentially become writers and ultimately promising pillars of school theatre.

Al-Badr affirmed that school theatre is divided into two tracks: the first is educational, and the second is instructional, noting that the competition falls under the first category of theatre.

He added that, despite the level of excellence reflected in the participants' works, these talents should be supported through specialised creative workshops that help further develop their skills and artistic potential.

The award ceremony also included an interactive dialogue session in which the participating students presented their works before the audience and discussed the concepts behind their theatrical scripts.

This reflected the competition's objectives of personal development, confidence-building, and strengthening communication skills, in addition to developing public speaking, performance delivery, audience engagement, and presentation abilities.

At the primary girls' level, student Ro-maissa Adel from Maymouna Primary School for Girls won first place for her script, while student Mohammed Rashid al-Adhba from Al Qadisiyah Model School for Boys won first place for his script.

At the preparatory level, student Al Jory Badr al-Manna from Zainab Preparatory School for Girls won first place for her script, while student Louay Abdulhamid from Hamza bin Abdulmuttalib Preparatory School for Boys won first place for his script.

At the secondary level, student Malak al-Asmar from Rawda bint Mohammed Secondary School for Girls won first place for her script. Meanwhile, Abu Ubaidah Preparatory School for Boys won first place in the teachers' category of the competition, while Maymouna Primary School for Girls won first place in the parents' category.

Qatar Charity (QC) delivered over 200,000 essential medical items to Syria to support its health sector and enhance the quality of services provided to patients, in co-ordination with the Syrian Ministry of Health. A significant portion of these supplies was allocated to meet the needs of dialysis units and blood banks, with the aim of boosting the capacity of dozens of health centres and hospitals across various Syrian governorates. According to QC, the shipment included essential medicines and solutions required for dialysis sessions, such as erythropoiesis-stimulating agents, sodium bicarbonate solutions, disinfectant solutions, and central venous catheters, all of which are critical to ensuring patient safety and maintaining continuity of care in line with standard medical protocols. Additionally, blood banks were supported with vital supplies, including single and quadruple blood bags, laboratory reagents for infectious disease screening, syringes, and blood collection tubes. The delivery also included specialised equipment such as platelet agitators and plasma freezers, enhancing the readiness of blood banks and ensuring the safety and quality of stored blood units.

These supplies were distributed to more than 40 centres and hospitals in several regions, including dialysis centres in Azaz, Afrin, Al Bab, Manbij, and Aleppo, as well as major hospitals and central blood banks in Damascus, Homs, and Latakia. Hassan Shaheen, health projects co-ordinator, emphasised that this support reflects a long-standing commitment to strengthening healthcare facilities and enhancing their ability to provide life-saving medical services. He noted that these efforts carry added significance given the ongoing challenges facing the health sector. "Through these interventions, we aim to ensure the continuity of essential medical services and improve the quality of care provided to patients, in a way that preserves their lives and dignity," Shaheen stated. This intervention represents a continued effort to address critical shortages of medical supplies and to reinforce healthcare facilities' capacity to meet growing needs, ensuring uninterrupted access to care across regions.

The session, titled "Child Labor in a Changing World: Emerging Challenges and Strategic Opportunities to 2030 and Beyond", providing a platform for leaders to examine how climate change, conflict and displacement, demographic shifts, technological advances, and evolving global supply chains are reshaping child labour risks and demanding innovative, integrated policy responses.

Addressing the session, HE Dr al-Marri reaffirmed that Qatar is resolutely committed to eliminating all forms of child labour, underpinned by a comprehensive legal framework and robust policy measures that prohibit child employment without exception.

He highlighted Qatar's achievement in establishing child-labour-free workplaces, reflecting the country's steadfast dedication to safeguarding children's rights.

Dr al-Marri outlined Qatar's experience in aligning national legislation with international standards, including ratification of ILO conventions, prohibiting employment of minors under 18 in key sectors, combating human trafficking, and establishing multilingual grievance mechanisms.

He emphasised the critical role of investments in inclusive education, social protection, and digital infrastructure to prevent exploitation, strengthen monitoring, and enforce accountability across national and global supply chains.

Education remains central to Qatar's strategy, Dr al-Marri stressed, underlining that the nation provides high-quality, inclusive education for all children, delivered in safe, adaptive environments that ensure equal opportunities and prevent any child from being left behind.

Qatar's commitment extends globally, with initiatives through the Qatar Fund for Development and the Education Above

All Foundation supporting family empowerment, social protection, and access to education in developing countries, particularly those affected by conflict and humanitarian crises.

In 2024, Qatar implemented over 50 educational projects across 77 countries, directly benefiting approximately 865,000 children and youth, enabling 14.7 million previously out-of-school children to access education, and providing skills development and economic empowerment to millions of young people.

HE Dr al-Marri concluded by emphasising Qatar's leadership role on the global stage, calling for strengthened international co-operation, knowledge sharing, and integrated multi-stakeholder strategies to deliver practical, sustainable solutions that place children's rights and dignity at the forefront of policy and action.

'Government Excellence Award contributed to improving overall performance'

Director General of Civil Service and Governmental Development Bureau (CGB) Saif bin Ali al-Kaabi said that the Qatar Government Excellence Award embodies the true picture of performance development in various government entities and has contributed significantly to the development of government work.

In remarks to Qatar News Agency (QNA), marking the award's 2nd edition's ceremony held yesterday, al-Kaabi added that this year's edition presented inspiring models in the course of government work and reflected impressive results achieved to improve performance.

He pointed out that the results of the second edition of the award showed an increase in the overall performance of government agencies by 38% compared to the previous edition, as more than

97% of government agencies succeeded in raising the level of their performance and results. This edition also witnessed the participation of more than 50% of national experts in the evaluation process. He indicated that the Qatar Government Excellence Award is undergoing continuous development, and a new category has been launched within the award categories, which is the leadership in the use of artificial intelligence award for government entities, in addition to launching a number of other individual awards that will be adopted in future editions. # Al Faisal Without Borders Foundation hosts 11th national Destination Imagination championship

By Tawfik Lamari
Staff Reporter

Al Faisal Without Borders Foundation, in co-operation with the Ministry of Education and Higher Education (MoEHE), organised the National Championship of the Destination Imagination (DI) programme, which the foundation implements in public and private schools across Qatar. A total of 110 public and private schools participated in this edition, represented by 233 teams and nearly 2,000 students from various educational stages. More than 10 training workshops were conducted, including sessions for team managers and judges, aimed at enhancing the quality of performance during the championship.

The workshops explained the programme stages and provided both scientific and practical training. In addition, 120 field visits were carried out to schools to monitor progress and support students in improving their performance during the preparation phase.

The national championship was held on February 6 and 7 at the College of Education, Qatar University. The performances demonstrated remarkable creativity and innovation in addressing the programme's challenges, reflecting both the high standard of the competition and the advancement of education in Qatar.

The programme evolves annually in line with global developments. In this edition, artificial intelligence was incorporated across all challenges, alongside the use of advanced technological and scientific methods within the students' theatrical presentations.

The results and winners will be announced by the end of the week, and an award ceremony honouring the top three teams will be held in April at the Qatar National Convention Centre. An official delegation conducted a field visit to observe the challenges, review student experiences, and assess the programme's impact on nurturing creativity and skills. The delegation included Engineer Abdul Latif Ali al-Yafai, general manager of Al Faisal Without Borders Foundation; Omar Abdulaziz al-Nuaimi, Assistant Undersecretary for Private Education Affairs at MoEHE; Mona El Helbawi, Group general manager of Al Rayyan Investment in Culture, Education and Sports (ARIES Group); Nawal al-Tamimi, assistant director of the Curriculum and Scientific Research Department; Dr Nasser al-Dosari, representative of the College of Education at QU; and Ghanem al-Humaidi, head of the Research, Talent and Innovation Section at the Curriculum Department and Learning Resources at MoEHE.

Abdul Latif emphasised that the DI programme encourages students to think without limits in solving challenges, develop creative thinking skills, and strengthen their competitive spirit. He noted that the programme also enables students to learn from other teams by exploring diverse perspectives and approaches, whether through theatrical or technological tools. Participation in the global championship further equips students with new skills and exposes them to different cultures worldwide.

He added that more than 25,000 students have benefited from the programme since its launch in 2014. He expressed appreciation to MoEHE for its continued support and to QU, represented by the College of Education, for providing logistical assistance. Al-Nuaimi lauded the students' creativity in integrating theatrical performance with engineering and visual technologies, highlighting their effective use of technology and ability to present solutions within the eight-minute time limit.

He also commended the growing number of participating teams and beneficiaries over previous seasons. He thanked HE Sheikh Faisal bin Qassim al-Thani, chairman of the Board, and expressed appreciation to the staff of Al Faisal Without Borders Foundation for implementing this pioneering programme, the first of its kind in the region.

El Helbawi thanked all participating schools and especially commended the foundation's team for organising training workshops for teachers, team managers, and student trainers. She emphasised that a purposeful and diverse programme such as DI serves as a strong motivational platform, noting that last season's success encouraged many teams to participate again. DI is a global programme implemented in more than 30 countries and across over 50 US states. The foundation has been implementing the programme since 2013, marking its 11th consecutive year of participation.

The State of Qatar participated in the 16th meeting of the Customs Union Authority of the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC) Countries, which was held in Riyadh.

In the meeting, the State of Qatar was represented by a delegation led by HE Chairman of the General Authority of Customs and President of the Executive Council of the Customs Union Authority, Ahmed bin Abdullah al-Jamal.

The meeting addressed several topics related to the development of joint Gulf customs work, including the following up on projects related to completing the requirements for the establishment of the Customs Union Authority, reviewing updates on the unified customs law for the GCC countries, in addition to discussing reports and minutes of the specialised committees and technical teams.

The meeting also addressed what has been accomplished regarding the implementation of the Executive Council's decisions, and discussed several technical items on the agenda, which contribute to strengthening coordination and unifying customs procedures among the GCC countries.

These periodic meetings reflect the pivotal role played by the Customs Union Authority in supporting the Gulf integration process, enhancing co-operation between the customs administrations of the GCC countries, and developing joint work mechanisms, which contributes to facilitating intra-regional trade and improving unified customs performance.

Halal Qatar Festival 2026 launched at Katara

The 14th edition of the Halal Qatar Festival 2026 was officially launched yesterday at the southern area of Katara Cultural Village. The festival, known for its distinctive heritage atmosphere, drew broad participation from livestock breeders in Qatar and abroad, with intensive preparations underway for the competitions.

Prof Dr Khalid bin Ibrahim al-Sulaiti, general manager of Katara, toured the festival grounds with department directors, reviewing the pavilions and organisational arrangements. He underlined Katara's commitment to delivering an exceptional edition that reflects the festival's status as one of the region's leading specialised heritage events.

Salman Mohamed al-Nuaimi, chairman of the Organising Committee, said the festival continues to strengthen its position as a premier heritage platform. "Halal Qatar Festival preserves and promotes the heritage of livestock breeding, supports breeders, and highlights authentic national values, while also offering opportunities for international participation that reflect Qatar's standing in this field," he said. The first day saw the arrival and placement of participating livestock in preparation for the Mazayen (beauty competitions), with members of the judging committee for the "Arab" category taking the oath to ensure transparency and integrity.

The festival programme features competitive rounds for Arab/Awarid and Syrian categories, including contests for the Most Beautiful Locally Produced Camel (Symbol Round), the Most Beautiful Five Young Females from a Single Farm (Production Round), and Elite rounds. Additional competitions include Most Beautiful Stud, Most Beautiful Individual Female, Most Beautiful Young Female, and Most Beautiful Three Young Females, reflecting the high technical standards of participants.

The festival's sections and pavilions are inspired by Bedouin heritage and include a livestock display area, auction and show stage, and a majlis for VIP guests, embodying authentic Arab hospitality. A local market and traditional souq in Bedouin-style tents showcase handicrafts, while art workshops for children foster a connection to folk heritage. Cultural activities feature five visual artists creating live paintings and Rababa musical performances, adding an authentic heritage dimension. Families are drawn to the camel-riding area and a section showcasing pygmy goats. Seventeen shops offer traditional foods, sweets, perfumes, and accessories, alongside booths for goat supplies, farm equipment, and veterinary services, providing visitors with a complete heritage, shopping, and hospitality experience.

How widespread is gun ownership in Canada?

Ten people including the shooter are dead after an assailant described by police as female opened fire at a high school in western Canada on Tuesday, one of the country's deadliest mass casualty incidents in recent history. Canada has tightened its gun laws in recent years, but has experienced mass shootings in the past and gun ownership is permitted. Here are key details about Canada's gun control laws:

So are guns illegal in Canada? No. Canada has much stricter gun laws than the United States, but Canadians are allowed to own firearms providing they have a licence. Restricted or prohibited firearms, like handguns, must also be registered. Canadians must be over 18 and pass a firearms safety course to hold a licence, which is renewed every five years.

Children aged 12-17 can get a minor's licence, allowing them to borrow non-restricted firearms like most rifles or shotguns for hunting or shooting competitions, and buy ammunition. Exceptions may be made for under-12s, including indigenous children, who need to hunt to sustain themselves and their families.

Indigenous people who engage in traditional hunting practices may not need to take a firearms safety course if it is too far away or expensive. Instead they can ask for alternative certification based on a recommendation from a community elder confirming they have necessary firearms knowledge.

Gun laws have been tightened over the years. Former Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's government introduced a number of restrictions on gun ownership starting in 2020 following a mass shooting in Portapique, Nova Scotia and the Uvalde school shooting in Texas. More than 2,500 makes and models of assault-style firearms, like the AR-15 rifle, have been banned since May 2020, according to Public Safety Canada. A freeze on the sale, purchase and transfer of handguns was introduced in 2022. However, attempts to ban certain types of rifles and shotguns were abandoned after opposition from farmers and hunters.

Canada has much stricter gun laws than the United States, but Canadians are allowed to own firearms providing they have a licence

Further legislation enacted in December 2023 prohibited new makes and models of certain firearms, increased penalties for firearms smuggling and trafficking, and added new offences related to illegally manufactured guns. It also included "red flag" laws and expanded licence revocation and ineligibility provisions to help address the role of firearms in domestic abuse, Public Safety Canada said.

Owners of banned assault weapons must give up or permanently deactivate their guns before an amnesty expires in October. To encourage this, the Canadian government has instituted a multi-million-dollar voluntary buyback program that will run until the end of March for individuals. The ban on certain types of assault-style weapons has drawn criticism from gun rights and hunting groups, many of which also object to the compensation program. Some Canadian provinces, such as Alberta and Saskatchewan, have refused to participate in the buyback program, citing concerns about the cost and safety risk to officials of taking part.

The number of registered handguns increased by 71% between 2010 and 2020, reaching approximately 1.1mn, according to the federal government. A 2017 Small Arms Survey estimated there were 12.7mn firearms in civilian possession in Canada, and there are an estimated 34.7 firearms per 100 people. According to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police more than 2.2mn people held gun licences in 2020. Most of those were in Ontario and Quebec, the two most densely populated provinces, followed by the western provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. A 2019 Angus Reid survey found most guns in Canada are found in rural areas and used for hunting and recreational shooting.

Canada's rate of firearm homicides is 0.5 per 100,000 people, versus the United States' rate of 4.12, the University of Washington's Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation (IHME) said in a 2021 analysis. Following are the mass shootings Canada has seen recently.

1989 - 14 women engineering students were killed in their classroom at the Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal, Quebec.

1992 - four professors were shot dead by a colleague at Concordia University, Montreal.

2006 - a gunman killed one woman and injured 19 other people in a shooting at Dawson College in Montreal.

2016 - a teenager killed four people in La Loche, Saskatchewan.

2017 - six Muslim men were killed in a shooting at a mosque in Quebec City.

2020 - a gunman driving a fake police car killed 22 people in multiple shootings and a fire he set in Portapique, Nova Scotia, the deadliest shooting rampage in Canadian history. — Reuters

Brazil's tax break adds to Lula's economic tailwinds ahead of polls

- Middle-class income tax breaks took effect in January paychecks
- Lula looking to expand appeal beyond his lower income base
- Solid job market, falling inflation put Lula ahead in polls

By Marcela Ayres
Reuters

A middle-class tax break that nearly halves the number of Brazilians paying income taxes is adding to economic tailwinds that give President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva an edge in early opinion polls as he gears up to run for reelection. The measure, one of his hallmark promises from the 2022 campaign, reflects an effort to widen the leftist leader's appeal beyond his traditional lower-income base. It is likely to add steam to an economy that is, though not booming, at least helping Brazilians stretch their paychecks further. Unemployment is at a record low, the median wage is at a record high and inflation — especially for food — has cooled enough that interest rates are set to start falling next month. That has helped shore up support for Lula, who leads likely challengers by four to seven percentage points in recent polls simulating head-to-head scenarios for October's election. Adding to that brightening backdrop is the new income tax exemption for monthly salaries up to 5,000 reais ($960) — over three times Brazil's minimum wage — starting with January payroll deductions.

PILATES, TRAVEL PLANS

Advertising professional Vitoria Santos, 30, plans to spend the extra 300 reais that just landed on her monthly paycheck on Pilates exercise classes. "It's a meaningful amount that really makes a difference," Santos said. "For some people, it covers the electricity bill for the month, the internet bill, helps pay for travel plans or a gym membership."

Because the extra disposable income will flow mainly to lower-income households that tend to spend extra money rather than save, according to statistics, the government expects the measure to inject around 28bn reais ($5.4bn) into the economy this year. However, many economists are skeptical of the policy's long-term benefits, arguing Brazil should expand its tax base to deal with soaring public debt. "It's bad economic policy, but it wins votes," said Fabio Kanczuk, a former central bank director and now head of macroeconomics at Asa Investments.

He questioned the wisdom of a tax break for Brazil's middle class, which diverts resources into consumer spending that could have boosted economic productivity or more effectively reduced inequality. Kanczuk said the stimulus is likely to quickly turn into consumption, including via credit expansion, as banks anticipate stronger household income. He estimated a boost of 0.2 percentage points to economic growth this year, with a similar effect on inflation.

SHRINKING TAX BASE

Roughly 11.3mn of the 25.4mn Brazilians who paid income tax last year, about 44%, are estimated to have dropped off the rolls, the tax authority told Reuters. Another 5.7mn received tax reductions, as the discounts were extended to incomes up to 7,350 reais. The shrinking income tax base underscores how heavily Latin America's largest economy relies on taxing consumption over goods and services.

It also reflects the priority Lula is giving to more affluent Brazilians after pouring public spending in recent years into programs that largely helped the poor, including cash transfers, assistance for the low-income elderly and disabled, cooking gas subsidies and financial aid for high schoolers. In recent years, the more affluent middle class has shifted strongly toward Lula's opponents on the political right.

Over the past year, Finance Ministry sources said the government has calibrated policy to reach middle-income households, such as subsidized mortgages for families earning up to 12,000 reais a month and buying homes valued at up to 500,000 reais. Senator Flavio Bolsonaro, the son of Lula's predecessor, who is seen as his main opponent, has signalled an economic agenda favouring tax cuts and a smaller role for the state.

SPENDING BOOST

Previously, Brazil granted an income tax exemption on monthly wages up to 3,036 reais, or two times the minimum wage. The reform taking effect this year has broadened relief. The full exemption now applies to workers earning slightly above three times the minimum wage. Brazilians making up to 4.5 times the minimum wage have collected partial discounts. That upper threshold includes workers such as Emerson Marinho, a 51-year-old postal worker, whose deduction from his latest paycheck fell by 110 reais.

"It's extra money I can put toward food," Marinho said. "I have two children and that represents two full weeks covering fruit and vegetables at home. It really does matter."

To offset lost revenue, the government introduced a minimum income tax on monthly earnings above 50,000 reais, and a 10% withholding tax on corporate dividends sent abroad. The shifting tax burden is expected to reduce income inequality in Brazil by 1.1%, according to a study by the Budget and Financial Oversight Consultancy in the lower house of Brazil's Congress.

Bruno Funchal, CEO of Bradesco Asset Management and a former Treasury secretary, warned that policies boosting consumption and public spending were part of an "unsustainable" growth model that has pushed interest rates to a nearly 20-year high. He argued Brazil should instead be cutting its debt and encouraging long-term investments, but recognized such an abrupt policy shift was unlikely ahead of the October vote.

"In elections, there is generally a tendency to avoid prescribing bitter medicine that will eventually be necessary," he said.

Growa’s intelligence layer behind Qatar’s food future

“Measurement of waste is not really accurate, or not recorded at all in certain farms.”

In a country that imports the majority of its food, that lack of precision carries weight. Growa’s platform uses IoT devices and satellite monitoring to track production, soil fertility, water consumption and energy usage — creating what Gabriel describes as “a true picture of agricultural data in Qatar.”

That clarity feeds directly into smarter import strategy.

“As long as you have enough data and it’s accurate enough, you can build prediction models that help you understand what you’re going to import and in what quantities,” Gabriel explained.

“This helps by reducing waste and improving imports, as well as local production.”

But both founders are careful to temper expectations around artificial intelligence. Davide rejects the narrative that technology replaces human judgment.

“It’s a misconception,” he said. “Technology is not here to replace anyone. Technology is here to make us better at what we do, to be more efficient. Humans and technology need to learn how to work together.”

He points out that many policies are built on averages — yet agriculture does not behave in averages. “Especially in our industry, nature is never average,” he said. “So we need to be really careful and use the data that we collect on a daily basis.”

The question of ownership remains sensitive. Gabriel’s answer is deliberate: “Whoever is producing the data, not just collecting it, should own it.” Growa works with anonymised data sets, balancing transparency with sovereignty.

Even predictive analytics, they admit, has limits. “It might create blind spots,” Gabriel said. “But it’s better to have a blind spot than to be completely blind.”

Looking ahead ten years, Gabriel envisions something far more structural: seed farms engineered for Gulf climates, regional seed banks safeguarding genetic resilience, and hydroponic systems built specifically for desert conditions. “It’s a very long-term project,” he acknowledged. “It would take around 10 years.”

For Davide, Qatar’s scale is its advantage. “It’s a small country with a small population, so we can be much more effective in what we do, and then export it to neighbouring countries.”

And for young innovators watching from the Web Summit floor, Gabriel offered advice rooted in experience. “Start earlier than I did. I started at 40. Take risks. Failure is normal, failure is healthy.”

In simple terms, Growa calls itself “the operating system of smart agriculture.” But beneath that phrase lies something larger, an attempt to shift food security from reactive policy to data-driven strategy.

In a region where food resilience is a national strategy, Growa is betting that intelligence, not just infrastructure, will define the next decade.

PM holds talks with Turkish FM in Ankara

HE the Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman bin Jassim al-Thani met yesterday in Ankara with Minister of Foreign Affairs of Türkiye Hakan Fidan. During the meeting, they discussed co-operation relations between the two countries and ways to support and enhance them, and the latest developments in the region, in addition to a number of topics of mutual interest. Both sides also stressed the importance of intensifying regional and international efforts to de-escalate tension in the region through dialogue and peaceful means, in order to consolidate regional security. ## US says Mexican cartel drones breached Texas airspace

Mexican drug cartel drones entered American airspace but were intercepted by the US military, officials said yesterday, explaining the brief but mysterious closure of El Paso airport in Texas. But Mexico said it had “no information” on drones at the border, and the Trump administration’s version of events has been questioned by lawmakers as well as sources cited by US media who suggested the shutdown was triggered by US military drone or counter-drone activity. The US Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) said late Tuesday the airspace over the Texas metropolis would be shut to all aircraft for 10 days, citing unspecified national “security reasons,” only to lift the closure after less than 24 hours. The report of a drone breach comes some five months into a US military campaign targeting alleged drug-smuggling boats, and could provide a pretext for President Donald Trump to follow through on his threats to expand the strikes to land, potentially in Mexico.

Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy said in a post on X that the FAA and the Defence Department “acted swiftly to address a cartel drone incursion,” adding: “The threat has been neutralized, and there is no danger to commercial travel in the region.”

A US administration official meanwhile said the breach was by “Mexican cartel drones,” and that US forces “took action to disable the drones,” without specifying how they did so. (AFP)

Three Ukrainian toddlers, father killed in Russian drone attack

AFP

A Russian drone strike on a house in northeastern Ukraine killed three toddlers and their father and wounded their pregnant mother, officials said yesterday.

Twin boys aged one and a two-year-old girl were killed in the attack late Tuesday night on the family’s house in the city of Bogodukhiv, around 20 kilometres from the border with Russia.

It triggered an outpouring of anger and grief.

“This is deliberate terror against civilians, against families, against children. Russia is consciously killing our future,” said Prime Minister Yulia Svyrydenko.

Local prosecutors said the family had been trapped inside after the attack. Video posted by the emergency services showed a bright red flame and grey smoke billowing over the collapsed roof of a house. “As a result of the strike, the house was completely destroyed and caught fire, and the family was trapped under the rubble,” prosecutors said in a statement posted on Telegram.

The children’s mother, who is eight months pregnant, survived, but sustained “a traumatic brain injury, acoustic barotrauma, and thermal burns,” prosecutors said.

Their grandmother was also wounded in the attack and had been hospitalised, Bogodukhiv mayor Volodymyr Biely said in a statement. The head of the Velyka Rogozianka community in Kharkiv, where the family is originally from, told AFP that they had only just moved to the town to be nearer to relatives several days earlier. The killed father served in the Ukrainian army for several months, starting in spring 2024.

He was discharged after his leg was blown off by a mine, the official, Anatoliy Yeliseiev said.

He added that the couple had only formally registered their marriage last week.

The pregnant mother of the family was discharged from hospital later on Wednesday, he said.

“The shock has passed,” Yeliseiev told AFP, referring to her condition, adding: “I don’t know how she survived.”

President Volodymyr Zelensky said the attack showed Russia was not serious about ending the four-year war, unleashed by Moscow’s invasion in February 2022.

“Each such Russian strike undermines trust in everything being done diplomatically to end this war and, time and again, proves that only strong pressure on Russia and clear security guarantees for Ukraine are the real key to stopping the killings,” he said on social media. He also said Russia had hit a hospital in the southern city of Zaporizhzhia in a separate drone attack. Moscow denies targeting Ukrainian civilians, even as thousands have been killed since it invaded. Under US pressure, the two sides have opened talks on trying to broker a deal to end the war. But their positions appear far apart with Moscow demanding sweeping territorial and political concessions from Ukraine.

Gunman who fired shots in Thai school detained

Reuters
Bangkok

A gunman who used a firearm stolen from a police officer to wound a teacher and a girl at a school in southern Thailand’s Hat Yai district yesterday has been detained, authorities said.

The 17-year-old suspect entered Patongprathankirawat School in Songkhla Province’s Hat Yai earlier in the day, appearing agitated, the provincial government said in a statement.

The suspect has a sister at the school, police commander Teerasak Chaiyotha said, but a motive has yet to be determined.

A female teacher was critically injured and had undergone surgery and was now in an intensive care unit, while a teen girl was shot in the waist and was now in stable condition, he added.

In a photograph shared by police, the suspect, barefoot and wearing shorts and a T-shirt, is shown pinned to the ground by armed officers.

He had earlier attacked a police officer and stolen his firearm, provincial governor Ratthasart Chidchoo said, adding that the suspect had a history of substance abuse and was discharged from a psychiatric hospital in December. In a video obtained by Reuters, armed police officers storm the three-storey school building as gunfire rings out. Another video shows students running down staircases while police — some wearing helmets, black bullet-proof vests, and carrying rifles — shout: “Go home kids, it’s safe.”

Canada stunned by deadliest school shooting in decades

AFP
Toronto

Canada was in mourning yesterday, Prime Minister Mark Carney said, after a lone shooter killed at least nine people, including seven at a school, and injured dozens more in a remote western town.

An emotional Carney said in brief remarks to reporters that “the nation mourns” with British Columbia’s Tumbler Ridge after Tuesday’s shooting. “Canada stands by you.”

He said he had requested flags be lowered to half-staff for seven days following the tragedy, among the deadliest shootings in Canada’s history, and that numerous world leaders had offered their condolences.

Tumbler Ridge, a tight-knit community of about 2,400 residents, lies in the foothills of the Canadian Rockies near the provincial border with Alberta, hundreds of kilometers from any major city.

Mayor Darryl Krakowka told public broadcaster CBC “the community is grieving. It’s a big tragedy, we’re one big family here.”

The town was in a state of shock yesterday as media began to descend on the remote community, ringed by snow-capped mountains.

Emergency responders found six people shot dead Tuesday at Tumbler Ridge’s secondary school, while a seventh person died in transit to hospital, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police said in a statement. Two others were killed at a nearby residence, while at least 25 people sustained injuries in the attack.

This photograph provided by local journalist Trent Ernst shows the middle school and high school building where a shooting took place, leaving at least nine people dead in the small town of Tumbler Ridge, British Columbia.

The suspect, described by police in an initial emergency alert as a “female in a dress with brown hair,” was found dead at the school with an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound.

Police have not yet released identifying information about the shooter or victims, but CBC News reported the suspect’s identity was known to authorities.

“We will get through this. We will learn from this. But right now, it’s a time to come together, as Canadians always do in these situations, these terrible situations, to support each other, to mourn together and to grow together,” Carney said. He called off a planned trip to the Munich Security Conference and will brief parliament at 2:00 pm (1900 GMT).

King Charles, the monarch of Canada, said in a statement that he and Queen Camilla were “profoundly shocked and saddened” to learn of the attack.

“In such a closely connected town, every child’s name will be known and every family will be a neighbor,” he said.

While several mass killings have occurred in recent years in Canada, deadly attacks on schools are very rare, especially compared to the neighboring US.

In 1989, a self-described anti-feminist man killed 13 female students and a secretary at Montreal’s Ecole Polytechnique. After the country’s deadliest shooting attack, which left 22 people dead in Nova Scotia in 2020, Canada banned some 1,500 models of assault weapons.

Tumbler Ridge student Darian Quist told CBC he was in his mechanics class when there was an announcement that the school was in lockdown.

He said initially he “didn’t think anything was going on,” but started receiving “disturbing” photos about the carnage.

“It set in what was happening,” Quist said.

He stayed in lockdown for more than two hours until police stormed in, ordering everyone to put their hands up before escorting them out of the school.

Cyclone kills 31 in Madagascar’s second city

AFP
Antananarivo

A cyclone packing violent winds has killed at least 31 people in Madagascar’s second-largest city, ripping roofs off buildings, causing flooding and felling trees, the Indian Ocean island’s disaster authority said yesterday, releasing an updated toll.

Cyclone Gezani made landfall on Tuesday, slamming into the country’s second city Toamasina, with winds reaching 250 kilometres per hour.

The National Office for Risk and Disaster Management (BNRGC) late yesterday said it had recorded 31 deaths, many after houses had collapsed.

Four people remained missing and at least 36 were seriously injured, it said, with over 250,000 people affected.

“What happened is a disaster: nearly 75% of the city of Toamasina was destroyed,” said Madagascar’s new leader, Colonel Michael Randrianirina, who had travelled to Toamasina ahead of the cyclone’s landfall to support residents.

“The current situation exceeds Madagascar’s capabilities alone,” said Randrianirina, who seized power in October, calling on “international partners and donors” to support the impoverished island.

Drone footage shared by the BNRGC on social media showed major flooding in the east coast city of 400,000 people, about 220km northeast of the capital Antananarivo, with residents wading through water and roofs ripped off buildings.

The city appeared battered, its streets littered with trees uprooted by the force of the cyclone.

The storm also caused carnage in the Atsinanana region surrounding the city, the authority said, adding that post-disaster assessments were still under way.

“It’s total chaos: 90% of house roofs have been blown off, entirely or in part,” said the head of disaster management at the Action Against Hunger humanitarian group, Rija Randrianarisoa.

“The roads are completely inaccessible because of trees on the ground, sheet metal,” he told AFP.

The CMRS cyclone forecaster on France’s Reunion island confirmed Tuesday that Toamasina had been “directly hit by the most intense part” of the storm.

Indian court sentences journalist to jail in defamation case

An Indian court has sentenced a journalist to one year in jail for some of his social media posts on the Adani Group, saying they were unverified, defamatory and portrayed the group in a disreputable light. Reuters reported from New Delhi. Adani Enterprises, led by billionaire Gautam Adani, filed the case in 2021 against India journalist Ravi Nair in a district court in Gujarat, accusing him of making statements suggesting “political patronage... financial irregularities and unethical conduct,” according to a Tuesday court order seen by Reuters. “No documentary material, official record, or verified data has been produced to substantiate the serious allegations made against the complainant company,” the court said in its order. Nair told Reuters he will appeal the conviction but declined to comment further. The Adani group did not immediately respond to a Reuters request for comment. Nair’s lawyer argued the posts were based on publicly available material and constitute fair comment and criticism, the court order noted.

Kuwait celebrates National Day in Doha, highlights deep-rooted bonds with Qatar

Highlighting more than three centuries of deep-rooted ties, the Embassy of Kuwait in Doha celebrated the country's 65th National Day and 35th Liberation Day yesterday, underscoring the strength of Qatari-Kuwaiti relations. The reception, held at the Sheraton Grand Doha Resort & Convention Hotel, was hosted by Kuwaiti charge d'affaires Fahad al-Zoubi, who lauded the strong and well-established brotherly ties between the two nations. While official diplomatic relations were established in 1971, he noted that relations between the peoples of the two nations date back more than 300 years.

The event was attended by a number of dignitaries and senior officials from Qatar and Kuwait, as well as ambassadors and heads of diplomatic missions accredited to the country. Among those present were HE the Minister of Municipality Abdullah bin Hamad bin Abdullah al-Attiya, HE the Minister of Transport Sheikh Mohamed bin Abdulla bin Mohamed al-Thani, HE the Minister of Endowments and Islamic Affairs Ghanem bin Shaheen bin Ghanem al-Ghanem, HE the Speaker of the Shura Council Hassan bin Abdullah al-Ghanim, HE Sheikh Faisal bin Qassim al-Thani; and other officials and dignitaries.

Al-Zoubi stressed that the strong bilateral relations between Qatar and Kuwait were laid by their forefathers, paving the way for current generations to enjoy such exceptional ties. He highlighted the two nations' shared traditions, heritage, and long-standing social connections, including intermarriage and extended family ties. These solid foundations, he said, have further strengthened diplomatic and political co-operation between the leaderships of both countries. Trade and business relations continue to grow, with bilateral trade reaching $1.4bn as of February last year.

He stressed that Kuwait has consistently promoted peace and stability in the region and beyond, noting that both Qatar and Kuwait adhere to the principle of peaceful dispute resolution to safeguard regional and international stability. In this context, the charge d'affaires expressed gratitude to Qatar and other countries that stood by Kuwait during its liberation, describing the Qatari people as generous and noble, always extending support and solidarity to their Kuwaiti brothers.

In 2014, Kuwait was designated by the United Nations General Assembly as a Humanitarian Centre in recognition of its efforts to advance peace and humanitarian causes. Al-Zoubi noted that Qatar and Kuwait share this humanitarian vision and a commitment to stability and peaceful coexistence among nations.

He added that the two countries have recently signed several co-operation agreements across various sectors to further strengthen their relations, and wished both nations continued prosperity, stability and progress.
